Preservation 2000 To Save Farmland And Open Space

EVERETT NEWSWANGER
Editor

MANHEIM (Lancaster Co.) - On a Lancaster County farm owned by Kevin and Audary Rohrer and family, a large group of public officials and other local farmers gathered Wednesday to witness the unveiling of Preservation 2000, a new plan to preserve Pennsylvania's farmland and open space. The press conference on the farm lawn was called by state Rep. John E. Barley (R-Lancaster) and state Sen. David J. Brightbill (R-Lebanon) to explain their legislative proposal that according to Barley, "will preserve the way of life we all love in Pennsylvania."

The Rohrer farm was chosen for the announcement because this farm family has been waiting to preserve their farm for more than five years.

Barley said the $43 million that was designated for preserving farmland in the spring budget was not enough to meet the backlog of farmland preservation needs, and the other changing preservation needs across the state. "Preservation 2000 will help preserve our farms, protect our open space, and promote smart land use," Barley said. "Our proposal commits $500 million to Pennsylvania's 67 counties over a period of 20 years to meet their pressing environmental concerns. Open space, farmland protection, stream relief, and sewer structure are among the needs.

"This is a flexible program that reflects Pennsylvania's changing needs. We are asking the counties, if they choose to come up with an additional 25 percent to bring the total to $625 million.

LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) — Four agronomic extension agents have mobilized their talents and experience into one collective Capitol Region Extension Agronomy Team.

The team combines more than 65 years of experience in agronomic crop production to provide a "whole farm" approach in managing farm-related issues.

According to John Rowehl, Cumberland County regional agronomy agent, with the advent of specialization, "I hope to do more for farmers and agribusiness than what I might have been able to do before."

Rowehl, who served for 14 years as an agronomy agent in York County before moving to Cumberland County, will specialize in grain crops as a member of BETHEL (Berks Co.) — As potato growers and brokers, the Tallman family carry on a legacy begun by their great-great-great grandfather in 1860. More than 1,300 acres in Tower City, Schuylkill County are farmed in a partnership comprised of George W. and his sons, William, Richard, George Edward, and Joseph.

One of the brothers, William, and his wife Shirley Tallman, who also operate a farm in Berks County, were honored as Berks County Outstanding Farm Family of the Year at the 44th annual awards banquet Wednesday evening at the Fleetwood Grange Hall.

Recipients of the annual award are selected on the merits of their farm operation, community work, and family involvement. In addition to the award, a $600 gift certi-

Delmarva Broiler

ATLANTA, GA.

DELMARVA BROILER/FRYER MARKET. FEDERAL-STATE

Movement of ready-to-cook whole birds was fair to good and was sufficient in keeping the bulk of seller offerings cleared satisfactorily. Live supplies were mostly moderate; weights were mixed in a full range of light to heavy. Processing schedules were moderate to heavy. Less than truckiot asking prices were unchanged at 53 to 65 cents. Trade sentiment was generally steady. In the parts complex, the availability of breast items increased as buying interest slowed and was only spotty at best. Leg quarters and wings were noted as in good demand and the supply of each was tight at most plants.

ATLANTA, GA.

NORTHEAST BROILER/FRYER PARTS - PART I FEDERAL-STATE

Trucklot buying activity was mixed with dealers remaining cautious as they fill their needs. Offerings of breast items were sharply discounted in an effort to stimulate interest, other items varied in both availability and price from plant to plant as well as from location. Retail and distributive movement was generally of a light and spotty nature. The market tone was weak on breast items, cautiously steady on the balance.

PRICES PAID PER POUND, ICE PACKED AND CO2 PACKED BROILER/FRYER PARTS, DELIVERED TO FIRST RECEIVERS IN POOL TRUCKLOT AND TRUCKLOT QUANTITIES.

NATIONAL EGG MARKET - AT A GLANCE

In New England, prices were higher on the medium and larger sizes, however, in the Southern area, prices were unchanged to lower on extra large and large eggs. The market tone was cautiously steady on the larger sizes, generally steady on mediums. Demand was mixed, fair to good; although mostly moderate, with best movement centering around retail features. Supplies of the larger eggs were at least adequate to fully adequate, and mediums were usually adequate to instances barely adequate. On the West Coast, inventories were generally ample. Breaking stock supplies were adequate from regular sources, and demand for additional product was very limited. Offerings of light type hens were fully adequate to ample for current needs.

National Grain Market

St. Joseph, MO
Tue Sep 07, 1999

USDA-MO Dept Ag Market News

DAILY NATIONAL GRAIN SUMMARY

Grain and soybean bids were sharply higher after the long holiday week- end. Wheat ¢ to 11 cents higher. Corn steady to 5 cents higher. Sorghum 1 cent higher. Soybeans 18 to 23 cents higher. Wheat bids were higher, despite the slowdown in export trading. USDA has made a credit deal with Pakistan for PL-480 purchases. Indications are they will soon tender for US wheat. Minneapolis wheat was sharply higher on continued rain delayed spring wheat harvest. Corn bids were sharply higher in reaction to sharp gains in soybean pits. Higher than expected year to date export inspection figures offered strength to corn bids. Sharply higher soybean bids were due to the extended dry weather over the weekend. Lower yields are estimated. Very good export sales over night and weekly export inspection numbers last week, also supported soybean bids. Grains inspected for export for week ended September 2, 1999: Wheat totaled 16.3 million bushels, down 13.6 million bushels, corn 43.6, down 5.8, sorghum 3.3, up 2.2, and soybeans 21.4, up 7.8 million bushels. Year to Date: Wheat totaled 309.3, up 40.9, corn 19.2, up 8.2, sorghum 2.1, up 1.0, and soybeans 5.3, up 2.2. Crop marketing years begin June 1 for wheat and September 1 for corn, sorghum and soybeans.

The OLD FARMER'S ALMANAC THIS WEEK WITH

HOLY CROSS, SEPTEMBER 14.

EMBER DAYS

This Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday (September 15, 17, and 18) are Ember Days. According to folklore, these days predict the weather for the next three months. Whatever the weather is on Wednesday, it will be echoed in October. Friday marks the trend for November, and Saturday will tell whether December's winds are mild and mellow or frozen blasts Ember Days are also repeated on the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday that follow the first Sunday in Lent, Whitsunday (or Pentecost), and the Feast of St Lucy They were times set aside in the Roman Catholic and Anglican churches for special prayer, fasting, and the ordination of clergy

There is never a Saturday without some sunshine.

TIP OF THE WEEK

☞ Time to dig up some parsley and chives for the window-sill. For best results, plant in a deep pot.

SOFT GINGER COOKIES

2/3 cup vegetable oil
1 cup sugar
1 cup molasses
1 medium egg, well beaten
3 teaspoons baking soda, dissolved in 1/2 cup boiling water
5-1/2 cups all-purpose flour
3 teaspoons cream of tartar
1 teaspoon ginger
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon salt

Beat together oil and sugar; add molasses and beat well. Stir in egg. Add soda and water. Sift together dry ingredients and add, mixing well Chill for several hours. Roll out ¼ inch thick on floured and sugared surface. Cut out cookies and bake at 400° F on greased cookie sheets for 8 to 10 minutes. Watch carefully. (This recipe is at least 150 years old!).

Makes 4 to 5 dozen.

Preservation 2000?

The Preservation 2000 Act that was unveiled this week at Kevin and Audary Rohrer's farm, by state Rep. John Barley, and state Sen. David Brightbill has all the ear marks of an innovative effort to partnership in an effort to support the Commonwealth's most pressing environmental concerns. The act these public officials plan to introduce when they get back into legislative session provides local governments with maximum flexibility in prioritizing their environmental issues. It is designed to provide incentives to counties to further encourage the preservation of open space and farmland, guard watersheds, improve recreational opportunities, protect natural areas and habitats, and address existing environmental problems.

Some of the existing environmental problems are listed in a page handed to the press at the time of the announcement. They include,

- Acid mine drainage abatement and cleanup efforts.
- Plugging of orphan oil and gas wells.
- Planning, education, acquisition, development, rehabilitation and repair for greenways, trails, open space, natural areas, river corridors, watersheds, community parks, and recreation facilities.
- Community conservation and beautification projects.
- Remining efforts.
- Nonpoint source pollution abatement.
- Local watershed-based conservation efforts.
- Improvement of water quality impaired watersheds.
- Water, storm water, and sewer infrastructure projects.
- And of course, protection of farmland in accordance with the ag area security law.

While presented under the popular banner of farmland preservation, when you read the proposed act, there is a lot more said about all the other "environmental concerns" than farmland preservation. Let's hope this doesn't turn out to be another attempt to save farmland that in effect adds so many environmental restrictions on the farmer that no one could hope to make a living at it. Lets hope all the other environmental concerns don't take so much money we don't even get the farmland saved.

Now Is The Time

Plant cover crops

Cover crops act as a nutrient bank, according to Robert Anderson, Lancaster County Extension Agronomy Agent. Cover crops are capable of using the leftover nitrogen from the previous crop season before it leaches into the ground water. If the corn silage crop did not use all the nitrogen applied, it leaves some unused nitrate nitrogen in the soil profile.

A cover crop will capture that nitrogen and use it for crop growth. In the spring when the cover crop is killed with a herbicide or plowed down, the nitrogen is released back into the soil during the growing season for the next crop. In addition, cover crops add organic matter to the soil.

Whether the entire plant is left in the field or just the roots, this plant material adds organic matter to the soil. Organic matter adds water holding capacity to the soil. Provides food for soil microbes, improves soil structure and adds to the soil ability to hold nutrients. A little money for seed and a little time to plant are small costs to pay for the many returns that cover crops provide.

To Plant Cover Crops for Feed

Robert Anderson, Lancaster County Extension Agronomy Agent, reminds us cover crops may also provide additional forage for livestock feed. If the cover crop is harvested as a silage crop, the nitrogen it captures from the soil becomes a source of protein when fed to ruminant livestock.

When the cover crop is used to produce silage, not only is the nitrogen kept from leeching into the environment, the silage grown will replace purchased feeds at a very small cost to the producer. Cover crops offer the most advantage when planted immediately after removing corn silage or tobacco.

To Invest in Assets

In a recent book review of the book <underline>Rich Dad, Poor Dad</underline> by Robert Kiyosaki, several observations were made on the differences on how middle class people and rich people view earning money.

The thesis of the book is middle class people work for money and rich people have money work for them. Most people live their lives chasing paychecks, pay raises and job security.

Kiyosaki says there are no get rich quick schemes, but learning the difference between assets and liabilities is very important. Rich people acquire assets. Middle class people acquire liabilities, but they think they are assets. An asset puts money into your pocket. A liability takes money out of your pocket. Financial aptitude is what you do with your money once you make it, how you keep people from taking it from you, how long you keep it and how hard that money works for you.

Feather Prof.'s Footnote: "If you are not riding the wave of change, you will find yourself beneath it."

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

WHEN THE CORN IS PLENTIFUL

September 12, 1999

Background Scripture:
Exodus 13:7 through 14:31
Devotional Reading:
Psalms 106:1-12

One of the things that makes much of the Bible so real and timely for me is that most of the people who are depicted in its pages appear to be "real people."

Like Abraham craftily managing to save his own skin by passing off his wife Sarah as his sister to the Pharaoh in Egypt (Gen. 12, 21); or Lot seeking to divert a crowd of men of Sodom from raping his two angelic guests and offering them instead his two virginal daughters (Gen. 19).

Sarah seething with jealousy and resentment at Hagar whom she herself had given to Abraham as a concubine (Gen. 16). And so on through Genesis.

When we arrive at the Book of Exodus this humanness is still evident, particularly the fickleness and changeableness of human nature. No sooner has Moses persuaded Pharaoh to "let my people go," than the Pharaoh has a stunning change of mind. "What is this we have done, that we have let Israel go from serving us?" (14:5).

NO GRAVES IN EGYPT?

We find the people of Israel no less fickle. With the Pharaoh and his army now in belated pursuit of the people of Israel, the people whom Moses led also have a radical change of heart. The Israelites turn on Moses with bitter sarcasm: "Is it because there are no graves in Egypt that you have taken us away to die in the wilderness? What have you done to us, in bringing us out of Egypt?" (14:11). Suddenly, they "remember" that they had been against this exodus thing from the very beginning: "Is this not what we said to you in Egypt, 'Let us alone and let us serve the Egyptians'?" (I'll just bet that was what they said in Egypt!).

How quickly they forget how terrible was their lot in Egypt: forced labor, tyrannical treatment, and a status that got worse and worse as they prospered. "For it would have been better for us to serve the Egyptians than to die in the wilderness." That is not a unique point of view.

This is true of individuals as well. Christ comes offering us the highest kind of liberty, yet many of us, cowed by the prospect of launching out into uncertainty, choose to stay with the bondage we know instead of the freedom we have only glimpsed. So it is, too, with some people who suffer from illness. Offered wholeness, they cling to the sickness that has become tolerable over the years rather than take the risk of being healthy.

STAND FIRM!

To all of this whining, Moses responds: "Fear not, stand firm, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will work for you today . . ." (14:13). This is one of those scriptures that we need to frame and hang in our homes, cars, and offices, because it is the key to life when we encounter opposition, feel trapped or threatened by the challenge to leave the old behind and step off into the new. Whenever in our lives we feel that we would rather return to the familiar misery of Egypt instead launching off into the unfamiliarity of the promised land, we need to heed these words: "Fear not, stand firm, and see the salvation of the Lord . . ."

Soren Kierkegaard, the Danish theologian, tells a story about a wild goose who flew into a barnyard filled with domestic geese. Perching on the fence, he began to the local geese, "You're geese and you were created like me to fly far and wide." He reminded them of their glorious heritage of flight and the glorious freedom that awaited them if they would but use their God-given wings. The geese were very impressed with what the stranger told them and they began to yearn to be like him. They enthusiastically applauded him. But the corn was plentiful in the barnyard and its shelter was cozy and warm. So, when he flew away, they remained where they were.

That isn't a story about just geese, is it. Sadly, it may be our story too.

Court Upholds Eminent Domain Protection For Farms

CAMP HILL (Cumberland Co.) — The Pennsylvania Farm Bureau applauded a ruling this week by the Commonwealth Court of Pennsylvania which upholds the protection provided to farms against unjust eminent domain condemnation for highway construction projects.

The Court, in a 2 - 1 decision, held that the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) must submit its plans to condemn the farm of Lois and Lamar White of Greene Township, Franklin County, to the state Agricultural Land Condemnation Approval Board (ALCAB) for approval. ALCAB was established to prevent condemnations of farmland for highway construction projects if a reasonable alternative to the condemnation of farmland is available.

PennDOT wants to take the White farm in order to construct a new interchange on Interstate 81 near Chambersburg. Throughout the design of the highway project, PennDOT has insisted it is not required to submit the Exit 7 porject to ALCAB, basing its contention on an exception provided in law for activities performed on an "existing highway."

Pennsylvania Farm Bureau had filed an amicus curiae brief in the case in support of a lawsuit filed by the Whites. "PennDOT's interpretation of the 'existing highway' exception would have allowed it to avoid responsibility for ALCAB review and approval on virtually every highway project that proposed to condemn farmland," said John Bell, Pennsylvania Farm Bureau's Governmental Affairs Counsel. "Almost every new highway project can be associated with an 'existing highway'."

In its amicus curiae brief, Farm Bureau argued that the General Assembly, in enacting the 1979 law which established ALCAB, intended the "existing highway" exemption to apply only to projects such as road widening, taking out curves or reconstructing an existing road. The Exit 7 project, on the other hand, would create a new road system in the local area with a new interchange with I-81, relocation of three existing roads near the proposed new interchange, and elimination of an overpass which presently links farmland on the east and west sides of the four-lane interstate highway.

Commonwealth Court, in its decision issued Aug. 30, agreed with Farm Bureau that the "existing highway" exemption is clearly limited by the law. President Judge James Colins wrote that, "ALCAB has jurisdiction over condemnation for highway purposes with the exception of activities relating to existing highways that do not go beyond the existing roadbed. Relocation of highways and the addition of an interchange involving new ramps and connector roads are clearly outside the scope of the exception (to ALCAB REVIEW), and PennDOT must seek ALCAB approval before it can file a declaration of taking."

The Court ruling is welcome news for Pennsylvania farmers everywhere. "For years, PennDOT has been trying to use a legal loophole to avoid ALCAB review on the Exit 7 project," said Bell. "Commonwealth Court applied sound reasoning in concluding that the 'existing highway' exception is to be interpreted very narrowly. The Court's ruling will go far in preventing PennDOT or other highway agencies from using legal loopholes to avoid their responsibility to go before ALCAB and demonstrate that their highway projects justify the taking of productive farms and will cause the least disruption of local agriculture."

Pennsylvania Farm Bureau is a voluntary, statewide farm organization representing over 27,000 farm and rural families.

Joint Milk Marketing Venture Created

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Dairylea Cooperative Inc., of Syracuse, New York, and Dairy Farmers of American (DFA), of Kansas City, Missouri, have joined forces to create a milk-marketing venture in the Northeast that will enhance returns for their farmer-members, as well as provide superior service to their customers.

The new entity, Dairy Marketing Services, LLC, will serve as the marketer of close to 10 billion pounds of raw milk annually, provided by more than 6,000 dairy producers located throughout New England, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware and West Virginia. Dairy Marketing Services will be supplying the milk requirements of 90 processors and manufacturers in the region.

Dairylea and DFA are the two largest dairy cooperatives in the Northeast. This 50/50 venture relates solely to their milk marketing operations. Membership activities, other member services and lines of business will remain separate.

"We are excited about putting together this venture which will allow for increased savings for our farmers on hauling and supply distribution," said Clyde Rutherford, president of Dairylea. "At the same time, we will be managing about 35 percent of the Northeast's milk supply, which will enable us to provide superior service to our customers, particularly those large dairy companies with multiple plant operations."

"DFA is the largest dairy cooperative in the county, representing 25,000 farms and 37 billion pounds of milk," said Lew Gardner, chairman of DFA's Northeast Council. "We are pleased to be joining forces with Dairylea in the Northeast for the mutual benefit of farmer-members and customers. Together, we can have a much greater impact on milk-marketing activities in the region."

Dairylea and DFA currently have a common investment in Dietrich's Milk Products in Pennsylvania, and have milk exchange arrangements with several of their common customers. The creation of Dairy Marketing Services will improve the efficiency of serving the fluctuating needs of all their customers. Major customers of Dairy Marketing Services include Suiza Foods, Kraft Foods, Great Lakes Cheese, Leprino Foods, H.P. Hood and Sorrento Cheese.

"This venture makes sense from every angle," said Rutherford. "For many, many years, farmers have been concerned about the lack of cost-effectiveness with respect to several milk tankers going down the same roads and picking up milk at different farms depending on which cooperative the farmer belonged to. Additionally, milk supplies that were logical for a particular plant often went to a more distant facility, because the cooperative serving that customer did not market that local block of milk. With the creation of Dairy Marketing Services, we move a giant step closer to maximizing the efficiency of milk assembly and distribution in our region."

Dairy Marketing Services will maintain offices just outside of Syracuse, in Liverpool, N.H. Rick Smith, Dairylea's chief executive officer and John Collilns, DFA's senior vice president, will serve as co-CEOs of Dairy Marketing Services, and John Siglow, vice president and chief operating officer for Northeast DFA, will assume the position of chief operating officer.

Dare To Be *Un*conventional

There's Nothing Conventional About Farming Anymore...

...why should you be satisfied with yesterday's conventional-tillage drill? The new 1300 drill is anything but conventional. The 1300 gives you the latest innovations previously available only on big drills - including hydraulic down pressure on the openers, a single-point spring adjustment, and a 3.24 bushel per foot seed box. While the competition is stuck in conventionally tilled fields, the 1300 is tough enough to handle minimum-till. You don't farm by somebody else's rulebook. Break with convention and contact your Great Plains dealer today to learn more about the 1300.

Drought Brings Health Danger For Cattle

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Many dairy and beef cattle producers in the Mid-Atlantic region face a double whammy this year. Not only is there a growing shortage of forages, but feeding drought-stressed crops could be deadly for their cattle.

So said Lester Vough, forage crops specialist for Maryland Cooperative Extension at the University of Maryland.

The problem, Dr. Vough explained, is nitrate poisoning, particularly in severely drought-stunted corn.

Excessively high levels of nitrogen are likely to occur in corn and other forages that have been growing under stress conditions, such as when corn has been fertilized for high grain or silage yields and becomes stunted by drought.

Vough notes that some soil moisture is necessary for plants to absorb and accumulate nitrates. So fields of late-planted corn may not have received sufficient rain for significant nitrogen uptake to have occurred. Although severely stunted, such plants may not have elevated nitrate levels.

In addition, the resumption of normal plant growth after a heavy rainfall will reduce plant nitrate levels. So forage harvesting should be delayed three to five days after the rainfall.

So how do you know whether or not your corn or other annual crops — such as sorghum-sudangrass — might have toxic nitrate levels? The only way to know is to have them tested.

The Maryland Department of Agriculture now offers free nitrate testing to farmers in drought-stricken counties of the state. Samples should be taken to Maryland Cooperative Extension county offices. They will be forwarded to the MDA state chemist in Annapolis for testing. Farmers should contact their local extension office for details on submitting the samples.

How can farmers cope with nitrate toxicity? Vough suggests these management practices:

- Cut the forage for silage. The fermentation process will reduce nitrate levels. Delay feeding the silage for about four weeks to make sure the fermentation process is complete.
- When chopping corn for silage, include only the top two-thirds of the plant. The bottom third always has the highest nitrate accumulation.
- Before feeding forage, have it chemically analyzed for nitrate content.

County extension offices in Maryland also have fact sheets available free of charge that pertain to nitrate poisoning of livestock, as well as procedures for feeding drought-stressed corn.

Successful Grazing Means Measuring Pasture Growth

WELLSBORO (Tioga Co.) — Successful graziers know there is more to grass-based dairy and beef operations than just turning the cows out each morning. Proper pasture management is critical, especially in drought conditions such as much of Pennsylvania has experienced this growing season.

"The key is keeping forage primed so it's ready to respond to moisture," said Tioga County Cooperative Extension Agent Craig Williams. "If you make it go dormant (through over grazing), it won't respond to rain."

Pasture growth and the resulting fertility and nutrient availability are the focus of an ongoing study Williams and several other extension agents are conducting throughout the state. The idea was to take weekly grass growth measurements, plot the data on graphs, then use the information to study the complex relationships between feed and milk production, pasture rotation schedules and regrowth rates, and the amazing variability, even on adjacent paddocks, of those regrowth rates.

Using the Alistair Pasture Gauge, an instrument that calculates grass density, height, and pounds-per-dry matter, agents have the benefit of uniformity as they obtain measurements. Everyone agreed the "eyeball" is the best measure, Williams continues, but with seven different agents there was a need for a "common denominator."

In Tioga County, Williams used Russ and Karen Tomlinson's Kick-a-Moo Farm, an intensive, rotational grazing operation, as a study area. During a Pennsylvania Association for Sustainable Agriculture-sponsored field day at the farm, Williams discussed the study process and, on the pasture walk, explained some of the differences in pasture fertility.

Grazing in a drought year is challenging, he noted. A field that "gets hammered" all the time will simply shut down. The data gathered so far shows how fast grass will respond to even a little bit of water, if it is in the right stage (of growth). Graziers must therefore be ready to adapt to changing conditions. At Kick-a-Moo Farm that means moving the cows about every 12 hours and keeping a close watch on the pasture growth. Those practices, in conjunction with the sporadic, small amounts of rain which have fallen on Tioga County, have been enough to keep the Tomlinson pastures relatively green.

"Some areas of the state have received no rain, and the plants have just gone dormant," Williams said. "That's the struggle with grazing. Keeping track of how the grass is growing is the only way to keep on top of it. It really does make it a week-to-week management issue."

Dairy Systems Management Tour Set

Roland P. Freund
Penn State Extension
Farm Management Agent

Different systems of dairy farming and how those systems are managed by their owner/operators will be the topics to be covered on "drive yourself" dairy tours in the capitol region.

Two farms in Franklin County will host the tour Tuesday, Sept. 28, and a week later, Oct. 5 two Adams County dairies will be visited. Penn State Extension invites you to join this tour.

At each stop the group will be given a brief tour of the dairying system, the management team will discuss how the business is structured (partnership or corporation), and how responsibilities are divided. They will focus on why they chose their system, how major decisions are made, and some specifics of goals and the performance benchmarks which are important to their operation. How the younger generation is brought into the business will also be discussed.

The schedule of visits will be:

• Tuesday, Sept. 28, 10 a.m. to 11:40 a.m., Pleasant Valley Jerseys, 3926 Guilford Spring Road, Chambersburg, PA 17201, (717) 375-4367.

The Lester Martin family will introduce us to their 300-cow Jersey intensive-grazing, low-investment system and the management of their family partnership dairy. ATMR is fed year round. The parallel milking parlor has recently been remodeled.

Directions: From Exit 5, I-81, take Route 316 south one mile to Stone Quarry Road. Turn right and go 1.5 miles to junction of New Franklin Road. Turn right and proceed 0.5 mile and then right on Guilford Spring Road. The farm sign will be less than one mile on right.

Lunch: On your own. Bring a bagged lunch or stop at a fast-food en route to the next stop:

1 p.m. to 3 p.m., Peckman Homestead Farms Inc., 1032 Peckman Drive, Chambersburg, PA 17201, (717) 369-2318.

Brothers Gerald and Lowell Peckman own this corporation west of Chambersburg. They have a low level of investment in their dairy confinement facilities. These feature bedded pack housing and a flat parlor for their 130 Guernseys and Red and White Holsteins producing more than 20,000 pounds per cow. A third generation is entering the corporation, which also includes a woodworking business.

Directions: From exit 6 off I-81 follow Route 30 west for 6.5 miles. Turn right onto Coble Road at the sign for Carlton Heights. The road is just beyond Denny's Auto Center. Proceed on Coble Road for .7 mile to Peckman Drive. Turn right onto Peckman Drive and proceed .3 mile to the farm which is located on the right hand side of the road.

• Tuesday, Oct. 5, 10 a.m. to 11:40 a.m., Lagging Streams Farm, 361 Barlow Road, Gettysburg, PA 17325, (717) 334-5406. Thomas Clowney with sons Robert and John and their spouses operate this family partnership milking 150 cows in modest freestall facilities and a modern parlor retrofitted into the old tiestall building. Estate planning is an ongoing process in this family business.

Directions: From U.S. Route 15 take Pa. Route 134 south 1.4 miles. Before the bridge turn right on Barlow Road and proceed 1 mile to Lagging Streams Farm on right.

Lunch: Please pack a bag lunch and plan to eat it with the group at Mason Dixon's new Visitor Center.

Noon to 2:30 p.m., Mason Dixon Farms, Inc., 1800 Mason Dixon Road, Gettysburg, PA 17325, (717) 334-4056. The Waybright family owns and operates the corporation which milks more than 2,000 Holstein cows in confinement facilities. They are renowned for their innovation in facilities and equipment.

Directions: From Lagging Streams Farm turn right and continue south on Barlow Road approximately 1.5 miles to the stop sign. Turn right and go approximately 1 mile to Mason Dixon Visitor Center on left.

Please help us observe biosecurity precautions. At all farm visits we will provide disinfectant, tubs, and brushes. Please wear rubber footware that can be disinfected before arrival at each stop and again before departure.

There is no requirement for preregistration. All are welcome to come to all or any of the farms.

If you have any questions about the tour, call one of the following: Philip Wagner, Franklin County dairy agent, (717) 263-9226; Larry Swartz, Adams County dairy agent (717) 334-6271; and Roland Freund, farm management agent (717) 240-6500.

Jersey Named Supreme At Tioga Open Show

CAROLYN N. MOYER
Tioga Co. Correspondent

WHITNEYVILLE (Tioga Co.) — "It's really fun to have all the breeds walking around here," said judge Mike Wolfe before naming the supreme champion of the Tioga County Open Dairy Show.

As Wolfe spoke briefly about the champion Ayrshire, Brown Swiss, Guernsey, Holstein, Jersey, Lineback, and Milking Shorthorn, he finally settled on the winner.

"Without further ado, I'd like to have the Jersey walk out here to the center of the ring. She'll be my supreme champion today. They don't come much better than this," Wolfe said.

With those words, Homeridge BBS Viv, owned by Brenda Robson Hodder, took her place in the center of the ring and accepted her $500 prize sponsored by Dietrichs Milk Products, First Citizens National Bank, Pine City Veterinary Clinic, Dugan Tractor, and Philip and Annie Clark.

Four-Member Penn State Agronomy Team Assembles

the team. Rowehl looks upon the Penn State directive to establish the team as a "reassignment" that could prove beneficial to everyone.

"It will allow us to deliver a higher level of experience than we have before," Rowehl said.

Rowehl said that he can call upon the resources of Penn State Extension to answer questions put to him by agri-industry. In the area of grain crops, more detailed answers to questions can be obtained readily from Elwood Hatley or corn specialist Greg Roth.

The team will serve a seven-county south-central portion of Pennsylvania with the highest amount of agribusiness in the state. The counties encompass Franklin, Adams, Cumberland, York, Dauphin, Lebanon, and Lancaster.

That area includes 38 percent of the dairy production and 34 percent of the field crop production for Pennsylvania, according to Paul Craig, Dauphin County agent and team member. Craig noted that the area draws in, on a yearly basis, $2.5 billion in ag receipts.

The work of the team, which begins officially Oct. 1, will not supersede or interfere in any way with the work of the local agents, who still serve as first contact source for those with questions about crop production. The team merely offers added value to those who depend upon Penn State.

"We won't take over the county agent's duties," John Rowehl said. But the agents can be relied upon at different workshops and conferences to provide a multicounty approach to solving problems.

Rowehl has a bachelor's degree in agronomy from Cornell in 1982. His specialty will include cultural management of grain crops; variety selection, plant populations, and row spacing; rotations, tillage, and site-specific management; grain crop budgeting, record keeping, enterprise analysis, and information management systems; and grain crop utilization and marketing.

Agriculture is becoming increasingly more complex and producers need to remain up to date on all aspects of growing crops, according to Paul Craig, forage crops team specialist.

Craig, Dauphin County ag agent, has the following specialties: forage production and management for dairy feed, corn silage production, forages in nutrient management programs, forage crop use and marketing, and grazing and pasture management.

Craig, who has served in Penn State Extension for 20 years, has spent the past 11 as Dauphin County ag agent. He previously worked in Washington and Monroe counties.

Craig has a bachelor's degree in agronomy from Penn State in 1978 and a master's from Penn State in agronomy in 1988. His specialty will encompass forages, including corn silage, alfalfa, grass, and pastures.

Craig noted a saying he heard from a producer a few years ago. "The farmer told me that the problem with farmers is they should think of themselves as businessmen — as white collar workers, not as blue collar."

Craig, confident in his knowledge of pasture and hay production, noted the team will examine the "whole farm" approach — examine the big picture, including the business operation of the farm, and look for ways to maximize productivity at the most efficient cost.

"Producers will be given the whole pie — the whole picture, not just a piece of it," said Craig.

The team will not only focus on traditional producer-oriented crops day meetings but on ag service providers, including certified crop adviser companies and their staff.

Mark Goodson, the third member of the crop team, is extension agronomist and soil and nutrient management agent, York County.

Goodson began his career in York County in July this year, "right at the beginning of the drought emergency," he said.

Goodson's specialties include soils and nutrient management. The work includes nutrient management principles, rules, and regulations; soil quality and health; compaction, tillage, and erosion control; land application of manure, composts, and municipal biosolids; and water quality and agricultural production.

Goodson received a bachelor's degree in agronomy from Delaware Valley College in 1981. He received a master's degree in extension education from Penn State in 1987.

Goodson formerly worked four years as a crop sales specialist for Reading Bone Agway in western Berks and eastern Lebanon counties.

Goodson is concerned that the critical issue going into the next century will be nutrient management. Goodson has a "gut feeling," he said, "that everybody's going to eventually have to document his nutrient management on the farm," regardless of the number of animals he has or farm size.

For producers, it is in "their best interest to have a plan," Goodson said. We live in a litigious time, he noted, and "suing is a tool people use — we're a suit-happy society," he said.

Goodson pointed out the recent story, he said, which appeared in the Agway Cooperator magazine about a farmer who was sued for noncompliance by an environmental group. The farmer eventually lost. It cost the farmer $5,000 in fines, $20,000 for mandated improvements to the farm, and a whopping $800,000 in legal fees. All this, said Goodson, because the operator didn't have a nutrient management plan (NMP).

Because of the nature of Pennsylvania geography and soils, with rolling hills and highly erodible land, runoff will be a critical issue well into the next century, according to the agent. And the Clean Water Act isn't going away.

Del Voight, Lebanon County extension agent, agronomy, will specialize in integrated pest management (IPM). The specialty comprises weed and insect identification and biology, use of economic thresholds to plan pest management strategies, disease identification and management, pesticide regulations and safe use of crop production products, and biological controls and other emerging pest management methods.

Voight received a bachelor's degree in ag science from Penn State in 1990 and a master's from Iowa State in 1992 in ag extension education with a minor in agronomy.

Voight, who began his career at the Lebanon extension office in the fall of 1993, will work closely with several Penn State specialists, including John Ayres, extension plant pathologist; Bill Curran, Penn State weed specialist; and Dennis Calvin, Penn State entomologist.

As part of the team, Voight will help identify and create different and combined strategies to handle pests, including leafhopper, corn rootworm, cutworm, and others. Working with Penn State experts, the pests can be identified, their life cycles mapped, and the team can come up with different methods to control them — cultural, biological, chemical, and crop-resistant.

Voight noted he also plans to schedule weed, disease, and insect control workshops for producers. More information about the workshops will be published in future issues of Lancaster Farming.

Voight said the team will be involved at the Ag Chemical Compliance School scheduled for the Holiday Inn in Grantville Dec. 17 this year.

The crop team is also putting together the final touches on a website accessible from the individual county Penn State Extension website addresses.

Also, a regional newsletter will appear regularly, entitled the Capitol Region Ag News. The first issue will be out in November, Voight noted.

QUESTION: Why has our percent butterfat dropped drastically even though we increased dry hay in the diet?

ANSWER: Questions like this often require a bit of background information.

This herd consists of all Holstein cows that normally test 3.6 to 3.7 percent butterfat.

The feeding system is a PMR (partially mixed ration) that consists of corn silage, haylage, and dry grain mixed together with hay fed outside of the mix.

Two groups of cows, a low and a high, are each fed a different diet. The main difference is that the low group is fed only the silage grain mix while the high group is fed additional western grown alfalfa.

Two thirds of the herd is in the high group.

The first thing that I look at is the history of production for the herd with butterfat test trends being my focus.

The high group to low group change in butterfat percent is minimal even though we normally see fat tests rise and production decrease as we increase days in milk. I would guess that this is because there is no long stem forage that is fed to low cows.

Knowing what we do about the diets, this is expected. More recent test day information shows fat dropping to 3.1 percent for the herd.

Since we have two different feeding strategies for the two groups, we need to examine the fat test drop in each group.

The high group is still about two-thirds of the herd with butterfat test values down to 2.8 percent. The low group actually rose this month to 3.7 percent butterfat.

Now we can focus on changes surrounding the high group.

When I visited the farm, I saw a new mixer wagon in the barn. The feed looked extremely fine in front of the high group. There appeared to be little if any cud chewing going on.

Since the purchase of the new mixer was one week before the low butterfat test, I focused there.

The dealer where the mixer was purchased said they did not need the hay kit and nobody else had used one to date.

The sequence of loading feed was silage, haylage, grain, and then hay from the 4x8 bales. It took a long time for the hay to mix thoroughly. This extended time also reprocessed the rest of the forage and the result was the very fine ration found in front of the high cows.

Why did the fat test of the low group not drop?

With no hay in their diet, the mixing time was actually less, due to the efficiency of the new mixer. Fiber particle length stayed the same and therefore rumen health stayed the same.

How do we handle this problem?

I instructed the feeders to put the hay in the mixer first and mix it until the hay was processed correctly. We then planned to back off five minutes from that time.

Next, we put in the rest of the ingredients in the same order as before. Now we mixed just long enough for the feed to appear the same from one end to the other.

Suddenly, the same components of the diet put together this way looked totally different. Within days, the cows were increasing their cud chewing and by next test, the far results were back to normal.

Future plans are to get the hay kit. Fortunately, little permanent damage seems to have occurred. This was due to the dairyman acting on what his cows told him.

Without DHIA testing how can this be done and who would listen?

Slocum To Speak At Farmer Dinner

CAMP HILL (Cumberland Co.) — State Senator William L. Slocum, chairman of the Senate Agriculture and Rural Affairs Committee, will be the guest speaker at a fundraising dinner for FARMER on Thursday, Oct. 14 at the Station One Banquet Center, Greenville.

Sen. Slocum will discuss the major agricultural issues facing the General Assembly. Sen. Slocum represents Pennsylvania's 25th senatorial district which includes all of Cameron, Elk, Forest, McKean, Potter and Warren counties and parts of Clearfield, Erie, Jefferson and Venango counties.

FARMER, Farmers Allied For Responsive, More Effective Representation, is the bipartisan political action committee of the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau, a voluntary statewide farm organization. "FARMER is dedicated to helping elect and keep supporters of agriculture in the General Assembly," said Harold Curtis of Columbus, Warren County, a member of both the FARMER Committee and Pennsylvania Farm Bureau's State Board of Directors. Last year FARMER endorsed and supported the campaigns of 67 candidates for the state House of Representatives and 15 state Senate candidates.

"Sen. Slocum is a prime supporter of private property rights and has stood firm in his opposition to unreasonable environmental regulations," said Curtis. "His persistence helped push Northeast Dairy Compact legislation through the Senate. He is a true friend of agriculture."

The FARMER fundraiser is open to the public. The cost of the event, which includes an all-you-can-eat buffet dinner, is $35 per person, or $50 per person and spouse. The Station One Banquet Center is located at 28 Sixth Avenue, Greenville. The fundraising event will begin at 6:45 p.m.

To obtain tickets, send a personal check, payable to "FARMER" to: Pennsylvania Farm Bureau, P.O. Box 8736, Camp Hill, PA 17001-8736. Deadline for ordering tickets is Sept. 30th. For additional information, contact Curtis at (814) 665-3143.

Preservation 2000 To Save Farmland And Open Space

This puts the money in the hands of local counties and continues our environmental agenda on into the next century," Barley said.

Sen. Brightbill emphasized the empowerment of local officials. "The process will differ in different parts of the state," Brightbill said. "In some areas, the value of farmland is growing faster than the cost of money, so it makes sense for the county and the state to go ahead and have a bond issue to borrow the money at today's prices to buy development rights to preserve farmland. So we want to empower commissioners and enable them to go out if they so choose and come up with the money today to preserve a lot of farmland.

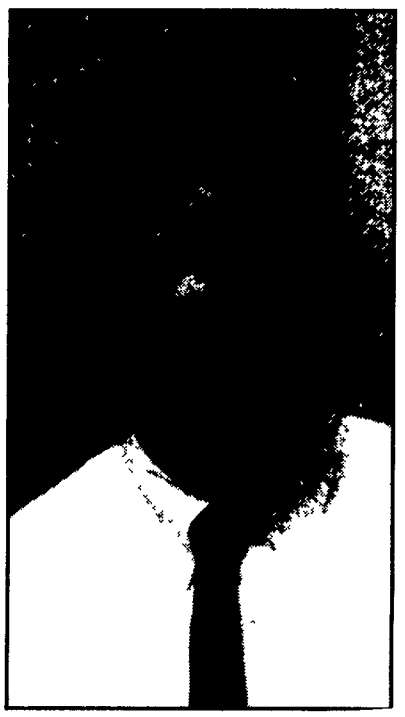
"In other counties they have other needs. For example in other parts of the state, the value of land is not growing as fast but they may need help to address the impact of mining. Our goal is to empower local officials who answer to local people and provide resources to get the job done," Brightbill said.

Barley and Brightbill are each sponsoring bills in the House and Senate to establish Preservation 2000. They plan to introduce the legislation officially when legislators return to session.

According to the lawmakers who represent neighboring counties, Preservation 2000 is a funding partnership between the state and county to preserve farmland, encourage sound land use, protect open space, guard watersheds, reclaim abandoned mines, support sewer infrastructure and invest in parks. The proposal will enable all 67 counties to float bonds to alleviate farmland preservation waiting lists and help with other environmental needs. The program is flexible to each county's changing concerns.

Through Preservation 2000, Lancaster County would get an additional $19 million over 20 years, enabling the county to preserve the waiting list in several years. In Lancaster County, about 225 farms await preservation. About 1550 farms are waiting statewide. Lebanon County would see an additional $4.8 million to help preserve farms on the waiting list.

The Rohrer farm has been in their family for more than 30 years. Their 140-acre farm has been on the county's waiting list since 1995.



Sen. David J. Brightbill

Caroline Steinman Nunan Receives Conservation Partnership Award

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — The Lancaster County Conservancy, in a statement released Monday, announced that Caroline Steinman Nunan, director of Lancaster Nerwspapers, Inc. and Steinman Enterprises, of which Lancaster Farming is a part, has been selected as the 1999 recipient of the Conservation Partnership Award.

Several years ago, the board of directors of the Conservancy passed a resolution creating the award. It was to be given at the sole discretion of the board, "to an individual, organization, governing body, or corporation which has significantly contributed to building cooperative partnerships among diverse interests to creatively address the conservation challenges confronting Lancaster County."

The first recipient of the award was Senator Noah W. Wenger.

Last year the board appointed a committee consisting of Mark W. Arborgast, vice presisent for land acquisition, board member Paul R. Ripple, M.D., and Barry L. Spangler, director of advancement, for the purpose of recommending an individual or organization who merited receiving the award in 1999. The board of directors unanimously accepted the recommendation of the committee.

In making the announcement, John W. Symonds, the Conservancy's executive director, stated that, "Mrs. Nunan has not only fulfilled the intent of the award but embodies the spirit of community involvement which led to the award's creation.

Spangler commented, "Someone once said that if you do not know where you are, you do not know who you are. Mrs. Nunan's roots in Lancaster County go back more than 200 years. Her family has played a major role in the preservation of what is unique to Lancaster County. Through her personal support, and involvement, she has actively worked to preserve a sense of place in Lancaster County."

Dean R. Steinhart, Ph.D., president of The Conservancy's board said, "The Historic Preservation Trust of Lancaster County, Lancaster Farmland Trust, and the Heritage Center Museum of Lancaster County are among a great number of organizations that have been sustained and encouraged by Mrs. Nunan's ongoing interest. She has shown willingness to be of assistance whenever it involves her beloved Lancaster County."

Spangler added that, "Mrs. Nunan has, over the years, received many plaudits and countless awards recognizing her contributions to Lancaster County.

"The Lancaster County Conservancy's Conservation Partnership Award is our organization's most prestigious award — our way of recognizing outstanding service in preserving the place we call home.

"In her own way, she has shown all of us who we are because of where we are — Lancaster County, Pennsylvania — a place of unique beauty and character unlike any other place in the world."

The venue for the award's presentation was a garden party held last evening at the childhood home of Mrs. Nunan, Conestoga House and Gardens.

Berks County Lauds Outstanding Farmers, Youth

ficate to Boscov's is presented by First Union Bank. (See feature story about the Tallman family on page B2).

Also honored at the banquet were outstanding youth who participate in 4-H and FFA. Four youth received $100 bonds.

FFA award winners selected at a county FFA teacher's meeting were Jamie Powell and Kelly Peifer.

Jamie is the 18-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Scaramuzzino, Honey Brook. Before graduation at Twin Valley High School, she served as chapter reporter and vice president, received the Keystone Degree, and participated in the Food for America, and many other civic programs.

Jamie also participated in Spanish language elementary agriculture programs at Kennett Square and constructed exhibits for first-place awards at Reading, Kutztown, and Allentown fairs, and at the state Farm Show.

Jamie participated in competitions for dairy foods, floriculture, forestry, public speaking, and interview. Jamie has earned silver and gold medals for record books at the state level, and for floriculture, and attended the FFA Made for Excellence conference and the state legislative leadership conference. She earned proficiency awards in forest management, floriculture, horticulture, and public speaking. Jamie was also a member of the band, performed in theater arts, and served as a mentor for elementary school students. She is working in the horticulture field and plans to study at Longwood Gardens.

Kelly Peifer, a graduate of Tulpenhocken Area High School, is studying agriculture at Penn State Berks Campus. Kelly was chapter secretary and president. She entered numerous projects and contests at local, county, regional, and state levels. She attended Pennsylvania Council of Cooperative Institute at Shippensburg and the National Young Cooperative Expo, Pittsburgh. In June, Kelly placed first in the interview portion of the Career Development Events held at Penn State.

Outstanding 4-H members selected by extension agents were Jennifer Connolly and Ashley Shollenberger. Jennifer lives on a small horse farm in Mohrsville with mother, Anne. Jennifer is an 8-year-member of Rocky Mountain Riders 4-H Horse Club, where she is correspondence secretary. She has been active in county leadership roles such as organizing the horse roundup opening ceremonies and chairing the decorations committee for the state horse show. She was also a member of the county horse judging team participating at State 4-H Days.

Ashley is the Pennsylvania Sheep and Wool Queen and the former county queen. She is president of the Berks County 4-H Swine Club and vice president of the Berks County committee of the Berks County Community Foundation, which helps make philantropy decisions affecting youth in Berks County. Ashley is a 4-H ambassador and attended state 4-H Capitol Days earlier this year. She is the daughter of Jeff and Penny Shollenberger and lives on a 90-acre farm in Bern Township.

Dairy Calf Management Isn't Just For Heifers

MIDDLETOWN (Dauphin Co.) — When the market advances, every calf brings more money.

But, historically, the price for smaller, lighter, less thrifty dairy bull calves rises more slowly in an uptrending market and declines more swiftly in a downtrending market.

Dairy farmers have the opportunity to give themselves a 50-cent to $1 per pound raise in the market price — simply by making a better bull calf.

Producing a stronger, healthier supply of bull calves can earn a couple thousand dollars in annual profit for a 60-cow dairy — enough to purchase two springing heifers.

"Return to Farm" buying interests are the demand center of the calf market.

Veal growers are the largest and most consistent buyers, purchasing nearly three-quarters of the Holstein bull calves. They pay premium prices for calves that demonstrate they were given a good head start on the dairy farm because they grow better, put on more weight and incur less risk and expense from death loss or treatment costs.

Veal growers buy 750,000 dairy farm calves each year, valued at $100-150 million. They also feed 200,000 tons of dried skim milk, whey and whey protein concentrate, returning $200 million annually to the milk market.

When dairy farmers manage their bull calves for better sale condition, they strengthen the economic position of the veal industry, which is the leading consumer of these two main by-products of dairying.

Because veal growers cannot compensate later for poor early calf management, buyers limit risk by identifying and severely discounting the calves which do not meet strict visual criteria.

To avoid these discounts, follow dry cow and calf management protocols, and wait until calves are at least three days of age, have a dry navel and can walk without assistance before marketing.

Calves going to veal barns set the price in any market. They must weight in the range of 90 to 120 pounds, and the best prices are paid for 100- to 110-pound calves. Below 85 pounds, they're worth very little.

Researchers at the University of Minnesota estimate that even in a low market, dairy producers will net $45 per head over the cost of keeping lighter calves a week or two to reach the desired market weight.

Veal growers look for calves that are healthy and vigorous, with bright eyes, good strong feet and legs, no joint inflammation, and they must be capable of walking unassisted.

A newborn calf with crooked, unsteady legs won't make the sort for the veal barn where sound, good standing legs are important.

A few extra days at home give tendons a chance to straighten out — making the difference between a calf suitable for special fed veal grow-out, bringing $1-1.50 per pound in the current market, and "bob" veal at 25 to 50 cents per pound.

A critical area is the navel which should be dry, not swollen or infected.

Because it is vulnerable to infection and only two inches from the liver, dipping with iodine at birth and repeating as needed, heals the area and prevents infection which can spread rapidly through the bloodstream.

Buyers are careful to check for any sign of swelling or infection, and they discount severely for it.

Calf marketers observe that when producers see the reasons for the price they received, and compare their calves with others on the market, they begin to ask what they can do to get the better price.

Managers at one central Pennsylvania marketing center, for instance, reported a noticeable turnaround in calf quality after a few months of price documentation and producer education, which included the distribution of free calf care booklets and brochures available from the American Veal Association.

According to one dairy farmer who received the information, aggressive calf management now pays dividends on his family's 175-cow dairy near Shippensburg, Pennsylvania.

"We're quicker to ge the navel dipped and to move that calf into a dry pen and we're paying more attention to where we put those prefresh cows," said Jeff Grove.

"It's the little things that count — sanitizing, washing calf nipples, giving vitamins and colostral milk right away. Our goal is a nice, sharp, clear-eyed calf — one you'd look at and like to have as a pet."

He's convinced that what's good for the bull calf is good for the heifer and for the overall herd program.

Dry cow nutrition, body weight at calving, and calving cnditions are all areas Grove has improved since he started seeing the calves through the veal grower's eyes.

"We're doing the same thing for our heifers as we're doing for the bull calves, and we're learning from the veal growers things we can apply to how we raise our replacement heifers," he said.

Glenn Pugh, another Cumberland Valley producer, echoed those sentiments.

"If the calves I bring are being born at 80 to 90 pounds, I'll change the dry cow nutrition to get those calves born at a more acceptable weight. Paying more attention to details and knowing how my animals stack up has profited in more ways than price alone."

DFA Says Federal Order Reform Vote Not A True Reflection Of Dairy Farmers' Support

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — According to Dairy Farmers of America (DFA), the only reason the USDA was able to announce successful passage of the referendum on Federal Milk Market Order Reform was that dairy farmers had little choice but to vote "yes."

"The alternative was even worse," said DFA board chairman, Herman Brubaker. "In no way should this affirmative vote be considered support for the new Federal order proposed by Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman. 'This was a vote under duress. This vote was dairy farmers' desire to keep the Federal order system intact as we work for the enactment of more farmer-friendly legislation."

DFA President and Chief Executive Officer Gary Hanman concurs with Brubaker that dairy farmers really had no option but to vote "yes" on the referendum to ratify the amended orders. "We worked hard to improve Class I differentials and Class III and IV price levels in both the House and the Senate," said Hanman. "Unfortunately, Congress' inability to act prior to recess, and Secretary Glickman's deadline, requiring our vote be cast by August 6, put dairy farmers in a real predicament," said Hanman "Even though we do not support the prices proposed by the Secretary, we had to vote in favor of Federal orders."

Hanman added a "no" vote would have meant several Federal orders would be terminated, eliminating the need for Congressional action on H.R. 1402 or other improvements that may come up for consideration once Congress reassembles after Labor Day. Without Federal orders to enforce them the need for Class I and Class III and IV prices is irrelevant.

Brubaker said DFA is encouraged by the support of 53 senators who voted to end a filibuster that had delayed legislation favorable to dairy. "Every senator who voted on the procedural matter of cloture knew the vote was really about Option 1-A, Dairy Compacts and extension of price supports," said Brubaker. "However, we think that the Senate vote in favor of cloture serves as a favorable expression of support and a 'marker' for consideration of Compacts, Option 1-A, Class III formal rulemaking hearing and price support extension in the Ag Apporpriations Conference which will take place in September."

Brubaker says DFA will continue to urge passage of H.R. 1402, introduced by Congressman Roy Blunt (R-MO), and passed by the House Agriculture Committee early in July. The bill mandates Option 1-A, preserves the USDA decision to reduce milk marketing orders from 31 to 11, and restores major provisions dropped by the Secretary of Agriculture that maintain income to dairy farmers across the nation.

Dairy Farmers of America is a dairy marketing cooperative that markets milk for 25,000 dairy farmer members in 45 states. DFA supplies milk to bottling and manufacturing plants that produce a complete line of dairy products and food components for consumers in the U.S. and around the world.

Agway Inc. Purchases BACS

ANDY ANDREWS
Lancaster Farming Staff

EPHRATA (Lancaster Co.) — Brubaker Agronomic Consulting Service (BACS) has announced that it has been sold to Agway Inc., Syracuse, N.Y., for an undisclosed price.

Michael W. Brubaker, BACS founder, will remain as president and CEO of BACS, he announced Thursday evening.

Brubaker, who founded BACS in 1978, said that the independent crop consulting company, which employs 20 full-time and another 10 part-time, will remain "business as usual" and retain its independent crop consulting structure.

Brubaker noted that all staff are employed by BACS, LLC (Limited Liability Corporation), not Agway, an important distinction when it comes to enabling BACS to continue to deliver independent advice.

Brubaker said that Agway Inc. contacted him several months ago. With the sale, BACS, which has about 2,000 customers, will retain its employees but hopes to expand its service to an increasingly growing business base.

"BACS has operated as an independent ag consulting firm for the past 21 years and will continue as an independent consulting firm," Brubaker said.

Brubaker decided to sell the company based on two reasons: to have the financial backing to provide the best ag consulting services BACS could possibly deliver, Brubaker said, and to have the backing to offer risk protection from potential liabilities.

Brubaker noted that numerous ag consultants in the country go out of business every year because of litigation. "The acquisition of the company by Agway has enabled BACS to obtain adequate liability protection," said Brubaker.

In a letter to customers of Sept. 3, Brubaker noted that, the day previously, BACS Inc. became BACS, LLC. The change to LLC is the result of becoming a subsidiary of Agway Inc.

As a subsidiary, Brubaker said he will be a BACS employee and serve as president and CEO. The company, which extended employment to all current BACS staff, offers independent advice and is still independent of product sales, Brubaker noted in the letter.

BACS wants to increase its staff and is looking for a farm to relocate the company headquarters, Brubaker noted.

Agway Inc. had sales of $1.56 billion in 1998. Brubaker noted that Cenex/Land O'Lakes, headquartered in Arden Hills, Minn., owns Centrol, Inc., of Twin Valley, Minn. Dennis Berglund, who is the incoming president of the National Association of Independent Crop Consultants (NAICC), is also the president of Centrol, Inc., noted Brubaker, which offers the same kinds of services as BACS, a member of NAICC.

Brubaker noted, "The relationship between Centrol Consulting and Cenex/Land O'Lakes is similar in that Cenex/Land O'Lakes owns Centrol. Centrol is one of the largest ag consulting firms in the nation." Berglund, Centrol president, is a member of the NAICC and is accepted by the NAICC as a truly independent consultant, as is BACS, according to Brubaker.

BACS has 10 full-time certified crop advisers. The company serves more than 2,000 farms in the Mid-Atlantic region.

America's Top Equestrians Return To Harrisburg For Horse Show

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Pennsylvania National Horse show, one of Pennsylvania's premier sporting events and America's largest indoor all-breed horse show, will hold its 54th annual 10-day competition here Oct. 14-23.

Since its inception in 1945, the event, held at Harrisburg's State Farm Show complex has raised more than $1.4 million for youth literacy, educational, and recreational programs through the Harrisburg Kiwanis Youth Foundation.

Each year, hundreds of thousands of hunter, jumper and equitation riders across the U.S. compete year-long for an invitation to join the best of the best at "The Show of Champions" in Harrisburg. The Pennsylvania National Horse Show is a celebration of horse sports, featuring more than 1,600 of America's top horses and riders, unique entertainment, shopping, food, and family fun.

Seven national championships are decided at the PNHS. The American Horse Shows Association/Black Entertainment Television National Junior Jumper Championship, Saturday night, Oct. 16, is one of only three USA Junior Olympics-Equestrian events, and features America's top under-18 jumper riders. More than 200 young riders culminate a year of competition on Sunday, Oct. 17, as they vie for the American Horse Shows Association/Eisers and Pessoa National Hunter Seat Equitation Medal Championships —one of the few events where the rider, rather than the horse, is judged.

Many of the young national champions go on to represent the U.S. in international and Olympic Grand Prix competition of the type featured at the PNHS nightly Tuesday, Oct. 19 through closing Saturday, Oct. 23. Spectators thrill to America's best Grand Prix jumper riders, including Olympic competitors, striving to win more than $115,000 in prize money by clearing jumps up to five feet high and six feet wide.

A week of varied equestrian competition begins Monday, Oct. 18, with Hunt Night, an evening of friendly rivalry for the mid-Atlantic's top foxhunting clubs. For nearly 150 years, foxhunting has remained a strong tradition in Pennsylvania, home to more hunts that any other state except Virginia. Teams and individuals test their hunting skills over fences, in a parade of hounds, the North American fox hunting horn blowing championships, and in races over fences for feisty and adorable Jack Russell terriers.

Spectators will be treated to an amazing variety of equestrian athleticism. Wednesday through Saturday nights, Oct. 20-23, the world-famous Budweiser Clydesdales will entertain spectators with the precision maneuvers of the celebrated eight-horse hitch. High-flying Grand Prix jumpers, fiery, high-stepping American Saddlebreds and their tiny Hackney pony cousins, thundering draft horses in hitches of one to six, easy-going western pleasure horses, and roadster horses and ponies who race around the ring at top speed take turns delighting and entertaining the audience. The $50,000 Budweiser Grand Prix de Penn National, the show's richest and most prestigious event held Saturday night, Oct. 23, will be broadcast on ESPN.

The show's special exhibitions include an extraordinary, whimsical demonstration of the classical equestrian art of dressage by Todd Bryan, Saturday night, Oct. 16 and again Friday night, Oct. 22. "The Sport of Kings" will thrill spectators as teams from Harrisburg and Lancaster play a heart-pounding chukkar of fast-paced polo, Wednesday night, Oct. 20. Always a crowd favorite, Jack Russell terriers race over fences Monday and Friday nights, Oct. 18 and 22.

Special family days at the horse show are Saturday, Oct. 10 and Friday night, Oct. 16. On both days, when competition and events are geared to kids, children will enjoy free pony rides and face painting. On Saturday, Oct. 10, one child under age 12 is admitted free with a paying adult.

An invitational class for local therapeutic riders will be held Tuesday night, Oct. 19. Horse babies age two and under will be showcased in a futurity for young American Saddlebred horses Saturday afternoon, Oct. 23. The Valley Forge Military Academy and College Band will appear at the horse show on Saturday night Oct. 23, as it has done for the last 51 years.

More than fifty boutiques travel from Palm Beach, Aspen, and points in between to display their jewelry, crafts, clothing, gifts and horse equipment and give spectators an early start on their Christmas shopping.

The show begins about 8 a.m. daily, and runs until 6 p.m. Oct. 14, 15, and 17, and until about 11 p.m. Oct. 16 and 18 to 23. General admission tickets are $10, $5 for seniors and children ages 12 and under, except Oct. 23, when all general admission tickets are $10. Reserved seating is available Saturday night, Oct. 23 — prices range from $15 to $25. All performance passes with reserved seating Oct. 23 are $100. # You run a farm, not a test plot.

At Agway, we recognize the complexity and importance of selecting the "best" seed hybrids and varieties each year. There are hundreds to choose from, all with competing claims. Testing each one would be great, but we know that's impossible—you have a farm to run, not a test plot.

That's why Agway does the testing for you on over 100 Northeast and Mid-Atlantic test sites. Only after a hybrid or variety has been repeatedly proven a leader does it earn the right to wear the Agway name. Which means you can count on Agway Farm Seed to give you exceptional performance under the toughest growing conditions. Year after year, field after field.

Olde Tyme Days Held In York County

JINNY WILT
Adams Co. Correspondent

MANCHESTER (York Co.) — As you drive down the lane on the Blaine Rentzel farm just north of here, it takes a few seconds to realize that the "putt-putt" you hear is not something bad that's happened to your car.

It's the sound of steam-driven engines brought here as part of the 15th Annual Olde Tyme Days, this year held in conjunction with York County's 250th Anniversary.

While the event began on Aug. 26, on Aug. 27 York County Ag Day was celebrated with the slogan "York County Agriculture – Growing Generations."

It was on Ag Day that state Secretary of Agriculture Samuel E. Hayes paid a visit and noted that York County's agriculture makes it one of "the flagship counties and it must remain so if our 21st century dreams are to come true."

Hayes said it is important to celebrate the past 250 years, but decisions made today are important so that the future 250 years are preserved. "We need to preserve farmland and the future," he said.

Olde Tyme Days, sponsored by the South Central Pennsylvania Historic Lifestyle and Power Society, was a dream of Bob Rentzel who serves as president of the society.

The event includes all types of plowing contests, the 126th Great Grangers Interstate Fair, and, this year, features John Deere tractors and equipment. Riding a four-wheeler through the 44 acres set aside for the event, Bob talks about his dream.

His hard work, along with "an immeasurable number of volunteer hours" from members of the society make this event a viable annual festival.

In a history of the society by Bob, it is noted that "During late November 1984, three men met by chance outside of Manchester at a craft show. Being acquainted with each other from attending the tractor show at Williams Grove for many years, all being very active members and putting a lot of effort into the activities.

"While this discussion proceeded, the idea of starting a new organization with some new and fresh ideas took form. It was decided that each of the three would solicit friends or acquaintances and come up with $100 each to start a new organization to promote the preservation of our local history."

In January, 1985, with 12 charter members, the organization was formed and the name for it chosen using the following ideas: historic — historic people, events, machines; lifestyle — preserve the lifestyle of rural Pennsylvania; power — preserve the power supply used by the rural and industrial community in past years; and South Central — the region of the Keystone state.

The first show was held in 1985 on Blaine Rentzel's farm and over the years has grown to a crowd of 10,000 people who attended this year's four-day function.

By 1987 the Pennsylvania State Plowing Match, which was on the verge of collapse, became affiliated with the Olde Tyme Days and in that first year drew three competitors. This year 47 people competed in the contest.

1999 plowing winners were:

Small plow: Robert Miller, Millersburg, first place, and Jay Stoner, Mechanicsburg, second place.

Large plow: Charles Noonan, York, first place, and James Mowry, Somerset, second place.

Antique plow: Matthew McCoy, Chambersburg, first place, and Charles Noonan, York, second place.

Open Class: Matthew McCoy, Chambersburg, first place, and Charles A. Noonan, York, second place.

David Sipe (in straw hat) gets a helping hand from others preparing for a plowing contest using horses and mules.

Willard Adams is the engineer of the 1926 Frick Steam Traction Engine owned by Irvine Zimmerman of Leola, Lancaster County. On the right is a 1914 Sawyer Massey, the prelude to Massey Ferguson, and owned by Tom Nace of Mount Wolf, and Dan Gehman of Stevens, Lancaster County. Both engines are usually in residence at Rough and Tumble in Kinzers, Lancaster County.

Top winners will compete in a national contest next year.

Two more recent contests are the horse plowing and garden tractor plowing.

Horse plowing winners:

John Allen won first place in two-horse, three-horse and sulky plowing, and Sean Sipe took second place in the two-horse plowing, and his father, David Sipe, took second place in the sulky plowing.

Garden tractor plowing:

Youth up to 15 years – Jerrod Hammers of Mount Wolf, first place, and Brandon Culley of Manchester, second place.

Adult 16 years and over – Charles Culley, Manchester, first place, and Charles Sanders, Windsor, second place.

In 1989, as the Great Grange Fair was declining, Bob was able to get it moved to the Old Tyme Days venue where it remains today and continues to grow, along with the other events.

Pasture Walk In Wellsboro

WELLSBORO (Tioga Co.) — There are many innovative, sustainable ways to make money in agriculture; to learn about one of them – "nomadic grazing" – plan to attend a pasture walk and discussion from 10 to 3 p.m. on Saturday, Sept. 18, hosted by Jim Weaver. With no land base of his own, Weaver rents pastures for use in his beef and custom heifer-raising operations. He says the question of sustainability is his "pet peeve," so come prepared for a good talk on today's agriculture practices! A $10 fee includes lunch, which is provided by the Northern Penn Holistic Management Network. For directions and more information contact Jim at 570-724-7788.

Selling Produce to Supermarkets

MANHEIM (Lancaster Co.) — Pennsylvania Farm Link, in cooperation with the Pennsylvania Produce Promotion Program of the Department of Agriculture, will sponsor two meetings for farmers who want to learn more about selling their produce to supermarkets. Growers are invited to attend meetings beginning at 7 p.m. in the produce sections of either Weis Markets in Lewisburg on September 28, 1999 or Clemens Market, Quakertown on September 30, 1999.

Charles Breneman, Vice President-Produce of Weis Markets, and David Blaick, produce merchandising manager of Clemens Market, will discuss their experiences working directly with farmers, their preferences for quality produce and their "wish list" of quantities and packaging. Jeffrey Patton, Coordinator of the Pennsylvania Produce Promotion Program, will discuss the program's objectives and assistance in finding buyers. Penn State Cooperative Extension and the Pennsylvania Vegetable Growers Association will offer marketing and production schedule information. Farm Link information and other marketing sessions sponsored by the non-profit will be available at both meetings.

Weis Market, Lewisburg, is located on Route 15 at the north end of town, 1/4 mile from the Evangelical Hospital. Clemens Market is located at the corner of Route 309 and 663 (Broad Street) in Quakertown

Strong Turnout For Southeast District Youth Dairy Show

KUTZTOWN (Berks Co.) — A number of youth exhibited dairy cattle August 24 at the second 1999 Southeast District Dairy Show, referred to as the 4-H show, held at the Kutztown Fairgrounds.

The show barn was divided into two rings. In one ring, Creedin Cornman of Carlisle judged Holstein, Lineback and Milking Shorthorn breeds. In the other, Steve Neely of Tunkhannock judged Ayrshire, Brown Swiss, Guernsey, Jersey and Red & White Holsteins.

The state youth district shows are held as qualifying events for 4-H and FFA youth to participate in the state youth dairy breed shows, set to be held Sept. 20 at the state Farm Show Complex in Harrisburg.

Actual show placings in district shows matter not. Rather, the awarding of blue ribbons by the judge serves to qualify the animals for the state show.

Further, showmanship and fitting ribbons are made at the same time, qualifying youth for those competitions during the state contest.

In judge Cornman's ring, Lisa Sonnen of Myerstown served as showmanship judge, while Donald Harwood served as fitting judge.

In judge Neely's ring, Tom Arrowsmith served as showmanship and fitting judge.

Participating counties include Berks, Bucks, Chester, Lebanon, Monroe, Montgomery, Northampton, Schuylkill and York.

A number of youth qualified for the show, though the exact number was not available by presstime. Results reported are by show and class placing results.

In the Holstein show, the senior and grand champion was a senior 2-year-old Juniperdale Skybuck Sybil, owned by Zach Fulmer of Nazareth.

The reserve senior and reserve grand champion was a 4-year-old, Antrim-Spring Charles Reva, owned by Douglas Sattazahn of Womelsdorf.

Molly Enos Wins Grand With Suffolk At Somerset Fair

GAY BROWNLEE
Somerset Co. Correspondent

MEYERSDALE (Somerset Co.) — Molly Enos, 10, the daughter of J.R. and Aimee Enos of Somerset, after seeing her 122-pound lamb win grand champion honors at the market lamb show in Somerset County, said she was more into showing this year than before.

"I think I got more into it," Molly said, when asked later about the success.

The Eager Beaver 4-H'er, who is in fifth grade at St. Peter's School in Somerset, said she likes to show lambs because they are calm.

Molly also enjoys horses and is excited about living where she can ride them more often when the family soon moves into a new house under construction on its small farm.

Molly has a sister, Elle, who is five and little Anna, who is five months old.

Nichole Shultz, 13, Rockwood, had the reserve champion market lamb with a Suffolk crossbred that weighed 126 pounds.

Nicole also had the home grown champion with another Suffolk cross-bred that weighed 125 pounds.

Roger and Joan Shultz are parents of the High Ridge Club 4-H'er.

Amy Schmuck, Rockwood, had a 122-pound Hampshire that Type Judge Richard Kuzemchak moved into the home grown reserve champion category.

The county bred champion was owned by Deidra Smith of Glencoe and the county bred reserve champion belonged to Molly Enos of Somerset. Both were Suffolk lambs.

Jennifer Zerby judges showmanship.

Trophies were sponsored by Sines Construction Company and Double S. Tack Shop. Ribbons were by Somerset County Lady Shepherds.

William Robert and Shirley Tallman with daughter Jennifer Kershner and son Nathan stand in the potato fields on the family farm in Tower City, Schuylkill County. The Tallmans, who also farm 106 acres in Bethel, are the newly honored Berks County Outstanding Farm Family of the Year. The Virginville Grange nominated the Tallmans for the award based on their farm operation, family involvement, and community work.

Potato Growers Are Farm Family Of The Year

LOU ANN GOOD
Lancaster Farming Staff

BETHEL (Berks Co.) — Ask William Tallman what he likes doing in his spare time, and he'll tell you, "Eat potatoes."

Sounds like a viable hobby for a potato grower.

William — Bill, as he likes to be called — and his wife Shirley are immersed in all areas of potato growing, from seed potatoes to marketing and holding offices on the Potato Board.

Although they live on a 106-acre farm in Berks County, most of their farming operation is in Schuylkill County, where they farm more than 1,300 acres in partnership with William's three brothers Richard, George Edward, Joseph, and dad, George W.

With 200 acres in potatoes and brokers for potato farmers on the East Coast, the Tallmans are direct marketers to stores and restaurants. The remainder of acreage is used to raise corn, soybeans, rye seed, and oat seed.

Farming is the Tallman's legacy. Roots in the United States were established in 1860 when William's great-great-great grandfather Peter Schwalm purchased 180 acres in Tower City.

He cleared half of the trees for general farming, but Schwalm also was a miller, tax collector, school board director, and community pioneer.

The farm was sold to Schwalm's son George, who was the father of Lottie, mother of William's father, George. Now 81 years old, George is in the office every day at the Tallman operational center with its long white buildings bordered by Schuylkill County's mountain ranges.

"He's still the boss," Bill said with a hearty laugh.

George is a walking history book and an astute businessman.

He said that in the 19th century, mining thrived in the Tower City area. Several lots of land were sold off the original acreage for housing miners. When George acquired the farm, only 88 acres remained on the original farm. Over the years, George purchased additional land parcels and today the Tallmans farm 1,300 acres. Conservation sod waterways were installed to prevent soil erosion.

George said that he began concentrating on potato growing in 1939. In the beginning, the fall crop of potatoes were stored in a series of remodeled Dutch-style bank barns and potatoes were packaged in different facilities. In 1978, a new operation center measuring 400 feet by 80-feet was built for storage, packaging, and truck maintainence.

The Tower City area is ideal ground for potato growing, according to the Tallmans. The elder Tallman said that the area has red shale topsoil, which washed down from the Canadian Shield about 500 million years ago. The red shale covers coal veins and coal swamps and the area has long been established as potato growing country.

George said, "I remember when I was four years old, Dutch Bucher (former Lancaster County extension agent) used to come here and load seed potatoes in the side car of his motorcycle to take back to Lancaster County farmers.

The elder Tallman is full of stories concerning both the history of the area and of potatoes. He said that in 1902 a massive strike was staged in the coal region. The leader of the strike came to the farm to see if there was enough potatoes available to feed the miners throughout the duration of the strike. He has a picture of John Mitchell, who led the strike, standing atop tons of potatoes. However, President Roosevelt intervened and called for the strike to be settled.

While many things have changed over the years, George said, "The blight that caused the Irish potato famine is still with us. The disease has developed new strains and it's a constant fight."

Nonetheless, the Tallmans believe that many potato farmers go out of business not from battling potato diseases but from the marketing situation.

Confusion exists in potato marketing according to the Tallmans. Many produce managers don't know the potato business and look for volume in order to buy cheaper instead of paying attention to taste quality, the Tallmans said. Although people still enjoy a good potato for its texture and flavor, the produce department markets potatoes for color and looks, not for flavor.

The Tallmans who market under their own name and under many different brand names keep abreast of new varieties. For their own usage, Shirley is partial to Katahadin and to a new variety called Reba.

In the operational center, potatoes are washed and placed into a hopper to be sorted for size and inspection. Automated machinery fills 10-pound bags at a rate of 800 to 1000 bags per hour.

"We are all cross-trained," William said of the partners who each have their area of expertise but fill in wherever needed.

George sprays field crops; Joe fixes packing equipment; Richard does the maintenance work on the trucks and Bill drives an 18-wheeler to deliver potatoes up and down the East Coast. Truckers also pick up tons of potatoes every day of the year.

"Stores are coming and going all the time," Tallman said of the ever-changing market.

Although the Tallmans deal with some chain stores, that aspect of the business also has its downside. Recently a chain with seven stores, which the Tallmans supplied with potatoes, went out of business. It takes some scrambling to make up for business losses suffered because of the demise of other companies.

This year the Tallmans also struggled against drought conditions. Water was pumped for potato irrigation from the last week in June through August. The potato crop looks promising, but corn and soybeans were not irrigated and suffered greatly from the hot, dry weather.

William said that like newscaster Paul Harvey, he refers to this summer as "The Year of the Big Dry."

George is alarmed by the consumers' apparent lack of knowledge concerning how food is produced. He overheard someone saying, "Why do we need farmers? We can just go to the supermarket and get food."

At one time Bill and Shirley grew tomatoes under contract for Chef Boyardee. Later they grew squash under contract for Mrs. Smith's Pies. Now they use the acreage in Berks County to grown corn and soybeans to sell to farmers.

The Tallmans' children grew up helping in the potato operation, but as adults are working in other ag-related industries. Jennifer is married and with her husband operates Jake's Greenhouses in Sinking Spring. Nathan recently graduated from Penn State and is employed by Genex CRI.

In addition to day-to-day household duties and caring for a large garden, Shirley recently made many batches of strawberry jam, and froze 100 pints corn and canned tomato juice from tomatoes she grows. An accomplished cook, Shirley is famous for her pot pie and noodles made from her homemade dough.

Shirley is also involved in the potato business. Weekly, she delivers potatoes to area restaurants and checks on orders.

William has another brother and three sisters who are not in the family business, but a sister Helen and her husband also farm potatoes. Helen is the first female president of the National Potato Board.

Bill is vice president of the board of directors for the Lehigh County Potato Growers Association.

The Tallmans have been members of the Virginville Grange for 25 years. This year the Grange nominated the Tallmans as the Outstanding Farm Family of the Year. The award is based on not only the farm operation but also community work and family involvement. The Tallmans were selected as the winners from applicants submitted by other granges throughout Berks County. The Tallmans were honored at the 44th annual awards banquet on Wednesday at the Fleetwood Grange Hall.

The Tallmans community involvement is extensive. Every year during the first week of December, the Tallman family participates in the reenactment of a 1560 Madrigal's dinner, sponsored by the Salem Lutheran Church. The whole family gets involved. Bill portrays a court jester. Son Nathan plays an apprentice. Jennifer and her mother are servants dressed in costume. According to the Tallman's, the dinner is as authetic as an actual dinner with Queen Elizabeth during the 16th century. The concert features music from that era with parts sang in French, Spanish, Latin, and Italian.

The Tallmans are active members of Salem Lutheran Church, where Bill has been a Sunday school teacher for 25 years, a member of the church council, youth leader, lay minister, and former lay representative for the Synod Council,

Bill also enjoys Nascar racing. He rides a high-wheel 1860 bicycle in parades. He has the distinction of being able to ride the high-wheel bicycle the first time he mounted it.

Shirley is also a Sunday school teacher and is a member of the Berks County Farm Women Group 2, where she served as former president and vice president.

Turn Up Heat For Leftovers

Some people claim there's nothing like cold pizza for breakfast, but most leftovers taste better when reheated. And you're right, there are guidelines for reheating foods to keep them as safe as possible.

The reason? It's possible that handling food after it was originally cooked caused some contamination. Putting the food in the refrigerator afterwards slows the growth if any bacteria but it doesn't kill it. When the food reaches the danger zone – between 40 and 140 degrees – bacteria multiply rapidly. that's why it's important to thoroughly reheat it.

Here are some leftover-reheating guidelines. when reheating liquids like sauces, soups and gravy, bring them to a boil. For other leftovers, heat thoroughly to 165 degrees Fahrenheit. Use a meat thermometer to check. At that temperature, any bacteria on the food from when it was handled after being cooked earlier should be killed.

If you reheat leftovers in the microwave oven, make sure no cold spots remain in the food. Covering the food helps a lot. Stir liquids or combination foods, like casseroles, once or twice while reheating to eliminate the cold spots.

If there's no turntable and you're reheating a solid food, rotate the dish once or twice by hand during the heating process.

With all that in mind, food safety experts say not to hesitate throwing out leftovers or any food if you have doubts about its safety. Even if you put food into a power furnace to reheat it, it still might not be safe.

That's because some bacteria produce toxins that aren't removed from the food even if the originating bacteria are killed from a thorough reheating. If the food wasn't cooked, handled or refrigerated properly to begin with, you're taking a bit of a risk if you hope that heating it thoroughly will make it completely safe.

Fish Capsules

Eating fish is not the same as taking fish oil capsules. Much of the beneficial health effect is due to the Omega-3 fatty acids in the fish oil, but fish is also low in fat, especially saturated fat. Substituting fish for meat once or twice a week is a health promoting habit. You don't get that from downing a few gelatin capsules every day.

There it is, in all it's glory.

The purple ribbon, Fancy rosette with gold-lettered tails. Grand champion award.

The one everyone dreams of.

But it isn't hanging above your entry. It's hanging over your competitor's.

Been there. Done that. Indeed, most any of us, if we've ever exhibited in any sort of competition on a regular basis, has been there and done that.

Because purple grand champion ribbons are limited, it makes them extra special. Extra desirable. Extra wanted. And, only one of each category can be the champion.

Fair season is in high gear around the countryside, bringing together exhibitors of everything from bovines to blossoms, jams and jellies to Jacob sheep, tiny peppers to giant pumpkins. Fairs offer exhibit chances for veterans with gleaming, restored, antique farm equipment to rookie 4-H'ers shyly entering their first–albeit a bit crooked and smudged–project.

Fairs are about fun. And friends. Fairs give you a chance to get reacquainted with folks you see maybe only periodically through the year, usually at shows which bring kindred spirits out in fellowship and good-natured competitiveness.

Fairs are about helping one another. We temporarily run out of hay and you mislay your show comb. We share. Your rose breaks off at bloom and I have floral wire for a temporary repair in my basket of show "stuff." We share. Your pig takes off around the fence and I join with a dozen others in giving chase. We corral the pig and have a good laugh. Together. A shared purpose.

If there is one common thread that runs through the camraderie of exhibiting, whether it's cows or cookies, it's that sense and spirit of good-natured friendliness. And, sure, it's about wanting to win. Why go to all that work and mess and dragging stuff around if one's intent from the beginning was to lose?

Actually, I still honestly believe that folks who compete in shows–of just about anything–benefit more from the process than the finished product. Especially for young people. It's the perfect arena for learning about craftsmanship, showmanship, sportsmanship and friendship. Not necessarily in that order.

Without a doubt, the stakes can sometimes be pretty high–dollarwise–for the grand champions of various fair and show categories. And because of that, sometimes exhibitors get carried away in the glory.

Especially sad to me is when parents of youth exhibitors get carried away in that glory, and behave in ways less than showing exemplary parenting and mature role models.

Sadly it does happen.

But far more frequently we see quiet, persistent examples, kids who try, year after year, and don't get a purple champion ribbon. Maybe don't even get a first or second or third. But they keep trying. And working. And learning invaluable lessons in the process.

To all those who try and don't stand at the top of the class, congratulations! To all those who lug and load and wash and worry, and never win a champion rosette, congratulations! To those who put hussle and hurry and hard work behind their hope, congratulations!

You may not take home a purple ribbon.

But you're the real champions.

Handling Rude Treatment

Have you ever been in a store and felt that the clerks were less than courteous toward you? What did you do? Did you leave angrily vowing never to return to that store again? Did you say something to the person to express your displeasure? Did you complain to the store manager? One thing is for certain – businesses cannot survive without people who will buy products or services.

If you are treated poorly when spending money (in any form) for a product or service, you should complain to the store manager. Report the quality of service you received and request that someone else more capable be provided so you can continue to spend your money there.

Hint: When speaking to the manager, keep your voice calm. State the facts as they occurred. When your voice is loud and has an angry tone, listeners tend to focus on how you say something rather than what you are saying.

Eight Women Vie For Somerset Fair Queen

GAY BROWNLEE
Somerset Co. Correspondent

MEYERSDALE (Somerset Co.) — Eight young women sought the title of Somerset County fair queen and throughout the week folks were commenting that seldom has there been a field of contestants with greater poise.

When all was said and done, the honor fell upon 16-year-old Natalie Foxwell of Meyersdale. Overall, she scored highest and in so doing, also received a $1,000 educational scholarship, plus a smaller one of $100 for the poise and appearance award.

Natalie is the daughter of Gary and Bonnie Foxwell.

A week paced with shows, games and awards found her admitting with a huge smile on the final day, "I'm a little tired."

Natalie hadn't missed a thing, but with unfailing charm and grace, demonstrated to the public, the genuine pride she has in the Somerset County Fair and in agriculture.

There were photos with champion sheep, swine, beef and dairy animals. There were grandstand introductions, late nights and early mornings, but she loved every minute.

Melissa Schrock, Berlin, the 16-year-old daughter of Ron and Michelle Schrock, as first-runner-up received a $350 scholarship and won the speech award.

Melissa was almost as busy the as the fair queen and industriously helped wherever a princess was needed.

The second runner-up and winner of a $250 scholarship, was Jessica Darr, the 18-year-old daughter of Scott and Susan Darr of Somerset.

Sara Hillegas of Fairhope won the interview award. She is the 19-year-old daughter of Ronald and Connie Hillegas.

The remaining contestants were Mindi Countryman, Becky Ray, Juliana Hillegass and Jessica Lynch. Their parents are David and Linda Countryman, Berlin; James and Bonnie Ray, Somerset; Kirk and Tine Hillegass, Berlin and Gary and Nancy Lynch, Friedens.

Mary Will, Berlin, who puts the fair queen contest together, said she asked the three judges to bring questions for the girls with them. After meeting one another and comparing notes, the panel agreed on two questions the girls would be asked.

The fair queen contest was the only time that male fair directors appeared in suits and ties.

The 1998 Somerset County fair queen Julie Sechler who continues to reign as the Pennsylvania State Fair Queen, made numerous appearances during the week.

On hand also was State Secretary of Agriculture, Samuel Hayes who was introduced to a near capacity grandstand crowd.

SHORTCUT TO Grandma's Desserts

Sweet endings with easy-to-find, quick-to-fix ingredients.

When you're working late or soccer games and piano lessons have filled the calendar, there's not much time left for eating meals together, much less ending them with show-stopping desserts. But cooks in a rush can satisfy their family's sweet tooth when they choose classic dessert recipes which have been updated for today's busy cooks. Save preparation time by choosing recipes that substitute quick-to-fix mixes for more complicated cooking steps and by keeping a few versatile ingredients on hand for spur-of-the-moment dessert plans.

Instant pudding trims preparation time for classic desserts and stands on its own for a quick ending to an everyday meal. No need to cook and stir—these mixes are ready to eat in minutes. And they make classic desserts like banana cream pie an easy addition to a weeknight menu.

Another favorite staple for snacking and baking is vanilla wafers. Offer them from the box to satisfy the entire family's desire for a sweet snack with wholesome goodness. In addition, top an ice cream sundae with a dollop of whipped cream and a vanilla wafer for a quick dessert with restaurant-style panache. Layered desserts get a touch of elegance served in a clear glass dish that's been lined with vanilla wafers. Or crush the wafers and mix them with a bit of sugar and margarine for a kid-proven-favorite pie crust.

Look to the produce section for other quick dessert ingredients. Bananas are the ultimate convenience food—they're available year-round and are a family favorite. Those with just a few brown spots have reached their maximum sweetness and are ideal for baking. Fresh-cut pineapple, available in the refrigerated section of the produce department, combines fresh taste with canned convenience. For an extra sweet treat, try specially grown extra sweet pineapple with twice the sweetness and four times the vitamin C of other pineapples.

With quick-to-use, versatile ingredients on hand, there's no need to cheat your sweet tooth. Take a shortcut to a classic dessert today.

Catch Them Doing It Right!

Back-to-school time can be a tough time for children — new teachers, new routines, new expectations, new friends (or establishing turf with old friends). This is an important time for parents to put more emphasis on the parenting technique of praise and "catching them doing it right."

We all know that the squeaky wheel gets the grease. In a family, it's often the annoying child who gets the attention or the misbehavior that gets noticed. It takes energy and deliberate effort for parents to act differently. But effective praise can be an incredibly powerful tool to help a youngster develop new, positive behaviors.

A reward system is one way to recognize positive behavior. These systems have their fans and their critics. I would not become overly committed to external reward systems because children may become dependent on the incentive to do the right thing. But, there are times and places when rewards work.

One grandparent shared with me how she used a reward system to honor her grandchildren's good behavior. Before their family vacation, this grandma assigned each of her grandchildren a certain color poker chip. While on the trip, she carried an empty gallon jar with her. Each time she saw one of her grandchildren doing something admirable, she would place a colored poker chip in the jar recognizing the act. She didn't make a big deal of it, but she did make sure that the kids could always see the jar.

When a child had accumulated a predetermined number of chips in the jar, they got a little prize (the kind of things you pick up at the dollar store or individual snack packs). She said it worked fabulously. In fact, by the end of the trip, the kids were practically falling over themselves to be polite or helpful. She said it was one of the first trips that wasn't filled with bickering.

My child's day care has another way of "catching them doing it right." The providers regularly praise the children for following directions, but if a child does something great under his own initiative, they will give them the special treat of getting a stamp on their hand. That's a big deal to a two-year-old. One day my daughter got a dinosaur stamp on her hand when she picked up other kids' toys without being asked. She was so proud when her teacher told me the reason she received a stamp.

Reward systems are not the only way to "catch them doing it right."

A spoken compliment can be just as meaningful as a treat.

When you see your son do something well, tell him. Be specific. Don't just say, "I was really proud of you tonight." Say, "I noticed how you introduced the new guy in your class to all your friends. That's really being caring." Describe exactly what you noticed.

These specific descriptions help a child learn what is valued. "You really worked hard on your homework this evening. You struggled with that one math problem for 20 minutes until you came up with the correct answer."

"I noticed that you ignored your little sister when she was bugging you and calling you baby names. That takes self-control!"

Catching your child doing it right can become a part of a balanced parenting strategy that includes both praise for positive choices and consequences for inappropriate actions.

And while you're at it, don't stop with your kids, catch others "doing it right" too — your spouse, your mother-in-law, your neighbor, your pastor, your secretary. A word of specific praise goes a long way in an environment that is too often critical and blaming.

Freeze Garden Tomatoes For Winter Use

As usual, I grew too many tomatoes this year. Can I freeze them to use later?

Sure! Freezing tomatoes is simpler, preserves more nutrients and if done properly, gives you a fresher flavor that if you canned them. Of course, you can't expect frozen tomatoes to thaw into fresh-from-the-vine ingredients for your salad, but they can be used in recipes that call for cooked or canned tomatoes.

To freeze whole tomatoes, pick tomatoes off the vine when you know you'll be able to freeze them within two to three hours. If you need more time, refrigerate them to keep them as fresh as possible before freezing.

When you're ready, wash the tomatoes thoroughly in cold water rinsing them several times to remove any dirt, or residue. Dip them in boiling water and cover for 30 seconds, using about 1 gallon of water per pound of tomatoes. (Start timing as soon as you drop them in; don't worry if the water stops boiling momentarily). The boiling water will stop the action of natural ripening enzymes that can change the flavor, color, texture and level of nutrients in the tomatoes while they're being stored in the freezer. The boiling water also loosens the skins.

After 30 seconds, remove the tomatoes and dip them in cool water. Peel them and cut off the center core, and cut into pieces if you'd like. Place the tomatoes into freezer bags, squeezing the air out before sealing, or fill rigid plastic freezer containers, leaving only a half-inch space at the top for expansion.

For stewed tomatoes, wash and trim the tomatoes, then cut them into quarters or eighths. Put them in a saucepan and cover and cook for 10 to 20 minutes, until tender. Cool them before packing them in rigid plastic freezer containers. Again, allow a half-inch space for expansion.

To make your own homemade tomato juice, prepare the tomatoes as you would for stewed tomatoes. Simmer them for five or 10 minutes and press through a sieve, collecting the juice. If you'd like, add 1 teaspoon of salt per quart.

Wash Your Hands to Protect Yourself and Others from Foodborne Illness!

Parents of past and present have probably said "wash your hands" a million times. This was and continues to be wise advice for people of all ages to follow, since washing hands is one of the simplest ways to protect oneself and others from getting sick.

Hands do pick up and carry germs, like bacteria and viruses, that can spread illness. When certain germs get onto food they have the potential to cause foodborne illness. In fact, poor personal hygiene of food service employees both at home and at work is one of the eight leading causes of foodborne illness outbreaks.

When and how to wash hands are the keys to reducing the number of germs on hands and lessening the chance of foodborne illness. When handling food or working in a food preparation and serving area wash hands:

Before you:

- prepare or eat food
- treat or cut a wound or tend to someone who is sick

After you:

- handle uncooked foods, particularly meat, poultry, fish, and eggs
- use the toilet
- help someone else use the toilet
- change a diaper
- play with the family pet, especially reptiles and exotic animals
- touch your face or hair
- blow your nose, cough, or sneeze.
- eat food
- smoke
- handle garbage
- tend to someone who is sick or injured
- touch door knobs, refrigerator door handles, etc.

If in doubt as to whether your hands have come in contact with germs, wash them.

How you wash your hands is just as important as when you wash them, especially when it comes to doing away with germs. Just rinsing quickly is not enough. Follow these steps to clean hands effectively:

1. Use warm water to moisten hands.
2. Apply soap.
3. Rub hands together for 20 seconds with soap and warm running water. Be sure to wash all surfaces thoroughly, including wrists, palms, back of hands, fingers, and under fingernails. If you are not sure how long 20 seconds is, sing the alphabet song while your was (it took me 22 seconds).
4. Rinse thoroughly.
5. Dry, preferably with a disposable towel.
6. An additional step that helps prevent getting new germs on your clean hands, is to turn the water off with the disposable towel after you have dried your hands. Then throw the towel away.

Experts recommend that a good 20 second hand washing, using plain soap or anti-bacterial hand soaps, and water and friction to remove dirt and germs, then rinsing well to wash away the dirt and germs, is the most effective way to wash hands. Also, research to date has shown that the use of a hand sanitizer after washing hands is no more effective in reducing bacteria on hands than a good washing. In fact, several studies have shown that hand washing followed by the use of a hand sanitizer actually increases the number of bacterial on the hands.

The next time you hear or say "wash your hands," remember that while it is an everyday activity, it is a very important one.

Talk It Out

If you get frustrated and feel like you're at the end of your rope, talk to someone whom you trust. Share your feelings with another person.

Talking things out helps to relieve your strain, helps you to see your concern in a clearer light, and often helps you to see what you can do about it.

Cook's Question

ANSWER — Joan Miller, Intercourse, wanted to know if the cream puff recipe that includes a cream or pudding filling is the same recipe used to make fancy puff sandwiches. Thanks to Debbie Reynolds, Wrightsville, who sent in her favorite recipe. She writes that she uses the same recipe and makes small puffs for sandwich filling and large ones for cream filling.

Cream Puffs

1 cup water
½ cup butter

Bring to a boil and mix well until mixture leaves sides of pan and forms a ball.

Add:

1 cup flour
1 teaspoon salt

Remove from heat and beat in four eggs, one at a time. Beat well after each egg until mixture is smooth. Dough will be slightly stiff.

Drop by teaspoon on cookie sheet for small puffs. Bake at 425 degrees until golden. Remove tops and allow puffs to cool.

Fill with chicken salad, ham salad, or egg salad before serving.

Unfilled puffs can be frozen. Large puffs, drop by tablespoon or bake at 425 degrees 25 minutes or until golden.

ANSWER — A reader purchased a package of brewer's yeast by mistake and wanted to know how to use it. Sarah Zook, New Holland, writes that it is delicious sprinkled over warm popcorn. Also, for extra nutrition, add a rounded tablespoon brewer's yeast when making homemade bread.

Another reader writes that her husband thinks he can't live without brewer's yeast. She puts it in a shaker container and he sprinkles it on almost everything he eats.

ANSWER — J. Poli, Leesburg, Va., wanted a recipe for pickled eggplant. Thanks to Deb Shoup, Ringtown, for sending a recipe she uses.

Pickled Eggplant

6 eggplants
2 medium onions, chopped
½ teaspoon allspice
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon whole white peppercorns
1-inch cinnamon stick
1½ cups cider vinegar
1½ cups honey
1 cup water

Peel and chop the eggplants, and put it and the onions into a pot. Cover with lightly boiling salted water. Boil for 5 minutes; drain. Cover with cold water; drain again.

Place spices in a spice bag and cook with the vinegar, honey, and water to boiling. Add eggplant and onion mixture; simmer until syrup is thick and vegetables tender. Remove spice bag; Fill hot, sterilized jars, leaving ¼ -inch headspace. Process pints 15 minutes in a boiling water bath. Yield: 4-5 pints.

ANSWER — A reader wanted a recipe to make canned applesauce. Thanks to Deb Shoup, Ringtown, for sending a recipe.

Applesauce

4 pounds apples (Rome, McIntosh or Jonathan)
1½ cups water
¼ cup lemon juice
¾ cup honey
Cinnamon, cloves, nutmeg (optional)

Wash and core apples. Cut into chunks. In a large, heavy stainless steel or enamel kettle, cook apples with water, lemon juice, honey, and spices until tender. Put through food mill or sieve.

To can: Pack hog into clean jars leaving ½ -inch headspace. Process 10 minutes in a boiling-water bath.

To freeze: Allow to cool. Pack into freezer containers. Seal and label.

ANSWER — Mrs. Amos Kauffman, Honey Brook, wanted a recipe to can apples (not apple pie filling) in hot water bath. Thanks to Betty Light, Lebanon, for sending these instructions.

Canned Apple Slices

General handling: For boiling water bath, use hot pack only. Use jars or plain cans. Process with thin syrup, plain water, or natural juice, as desired.

Because apple oxidizes in air, work quickly with only one canner batch at a time. Wash, peel, and core apples, treat pieces with an anti-discoloration solution such as lemon juice or commercial color preserver.

Drain and rinse prepared pieces. Place in a pot cover with hot thin syrup or water, boil gently 5 minutes. Lift out with slotted spoon and pack in jars. Fill clean hot jars leaving ½ -inch headroom. Add boiling hot syrup, leaving ½ -inch headroom. Adjust lids. Process in boiling water bath 212 degrees 15 minutes for pints or 20 minutes for quarts.

Remove jars, tighten lids if necessary.

Thin syrup: 1 cup granulated sugar to 3 to 4 cups water if desired. Add ½ teaspoon ascorbic acid for each quart of syrup to prevent darkening of fruit during storage.

'Lucky' Finds A Happy Home With Clark Family

CAROLYN N. MOYER
Tioga County
Correspondent

WELLSBORO (Tioga Co.) — To many 12-year-old girls who just won a raffle at the fair, it might be difficult to choose between receiving $100 cash or taking home a tiny Jersey calf. But for Mary Catherine Clark, Wellsboro, the choice was easy.

"I love animals. I always wanted a cow. I want to be involved with animals in my career when I grow up," she said with a grin that lit up her face.

In a typical year, more than 700 tickets are sold in the raffle sponsored by the Bradford-Tioga Jersey Club at both the Troy Fair and Tioga County Fair.

"I was trying to win this for three years," admitted Mary Catherine. "But I was younger then and I'd just put in maybe two or three tickets. Last year I put in 12 tickets because it was six tickets for $5. I thought she was really cute."

Mary Catherine was buying chances on Way-Hi Melroe Regina Lucky, a month-old registered Jersey calf, donated to the Jersey Club by the Vern Robinson family.

Her mother Shelly, knew she had taken some allowance money with her to the fair and saw her buying raffle tickets.

"Thank goodness we had talked about it when we saw her buying raffle tickets at the fair." said Shelly.

"Skip (Mary Catherine's father) said to me, what are we going to do if she wins this, and we decided that it was one of the more wholesome things we could allow her to do at this age. So, we just let her buy the tickets and thought the chances are slim that she would win it," explained Shelly. "We decided that we would support her in raising it if that is what she wanted. We thought it would be a really nice thing to do to keep her out of trouble and busy."

Mary Catherine was not a stranger to caring for animals. She already had her hand in raising chickens, two dogs, a cat, seven or eight fish and an occasional turtle, beetle or caterpillar. She also exercises her entrepreneurial skills by selling the eggs from her chickens.

"We knew she was pretty responsible. She had chickens and we knew that she would take pretty good care of (the calf)," said Shelly.

When Mary Catherine learned she had won the calf, she was running errands with her father and brother, Patrick. We were sitting in the car while my dad went into the office and the cell phone rang. My Mom is the only one who knows my Dad's cell phone number, but we didn't answer because we didn't know if we should. But we called her back and for a while she was just normal and then she said, 'you won the calf!'" explained Mary Catherine. "The I just hung up the phone and I looked at my brother and I just screamed!"

The response from Dad wasn't quite as enthusiastic.

"I was thinking about all the practical things like feed, housing, transportation, he admitted.

"He said, 'What are we going to do with a cow?'" laughed Mary Catherine.

After receiving the good news, the family turned their car back to the fairgounds to check things out.

"We went back to the fair and there was only one person there. We were hoping to find someone who had a trailer, and there wasn't anyone. So we wondered how we would get this calf home," recalled Skip.

Fair barn chairman Ernie Norman, who had returned to the fairgrounds that evening told the Clarks that she had come to the fair in a feedbag.

The whole family pitches in to help Mary Catherine with the chores created by the summer yearling heifer. Mary's father, Skip, left, often helps feed before beginning his day as a physician. 10-year-old Patrick likes to help walk her, and Mom, Shelly, who is a dietitian, helps whenever she can.

"So we, put in her a feedbag and put her in the back of Shelly's station wagon and she came home in the back of the car.."

When they neared their home they still hadn't decided what they were going to do with her. Skip continued, "We thought we could get a halter and stake her out in the yard as one solution. But as we were driving by our neighbor's farm, we knew he had some horse stalls that he didn't use. So we pulled into the driveway and I said, 'Charlie, I need your help!'"

I guess we looked fairly distraught, because he said, 'Gosh, what's the matter?' I said, I have a cow in the back of my car."

At first Charlie, who raised Simmental cattle, didn't believe what his neighbor was saying, but after a quick explanation, he readily agreed to house the calf. Lucky stayed at the neighbor's farm for four months, until the clarks could find her a more permanent home.

For farm families, adding one more calf to a roster of daily chores isn't a daunting task. For the Clarks, however, who had virtually no farm experience, adding a calf meant not only changes in their daily routine, but also a change in the landscape.

"We had these plans for the barn for 11 years," joked Shelly. "Suddenly within two weeks of Lucky coming home, the concrete slab is being poured. So our barn is up, but (Skip) had been wanting to do this for quite a while," commented Shelly.

Shelly, who grew up near Rochester, N.Y., was a complete stranger to farm life. Skip, however, recalls spending summer vacations at his grandfather's dairy farm in Wisconsin.

Right now, Mary's parents support her enterprise wholeheartedly, even when she asked for a show halter for her birthday.

"My dad buys all of the feed and I get the brushes and stuff like that. I plan on at least helping with the feed when I can. I learned responsibility with the calf, even though I've had other animals. I think the chickens helped me a lot. I would be hard to just jump in and do everything without practice," noted Mary Catherine.

The excitement and enthusiasm that comes with Mary Catherine's desire to care for animals isn't even extinguished when that alarm clock rings at 5:45 a.m. so that chores can be completed before the school day begins.

"Sometimes we let her sleep if we feel she really needs the sleep or if she has something big

Creatively Reshaping House Dimensions

Are your rooms too small? Ceilings too low? There's probably something about your home that you'd love to change.

Correcting these shortcomings in the dimensions of your rooms may be easier—and far less expensive than you think.

To make a room seem more spacious use a light colored paint. Lighter colors reflect more daylight and artificial light, giving an illusion of expansiveness.

Want the space to feel larger still? Decorate the room in a monochromatic color scheme using similar light colors on walls, ceilings, rug, and furniture.

To enhance the illusion of height in a room with a low ceiling, paint the ceiling white using a satin or semi-gloss paint and use a light colored carpeting. Using vertical patterns on the wall will also "raise" the ceiling.

To make a room seem smaller you can "shrink" space with pattern and dark warm colors (reds, apricots, and golds) walls and ceilings. Adding texture by "sponging" or stippling" the walls will shrink it still further.

To restrict the height of a ceiling, paint it darker than the walls and use the ceiling color to paint a wide band on the top six inches to the wall.

To "reconfigure" a room use a light color of paint on the longer walls, and a darker shade of paint on the narrower sides.

Conversely, if you want to narrow a space, apply light paint to the shorter walls, and dark paint to the longer walls.

To get the best results, a top quality interior latex paint is best for most jobs. It goes on smoothly and evenly, covers well, resists stains and touches up nicely.

Lazarus Family Celebrates 45 Years At Allentown With Sweep Of Swine Breeds

ANDY ANDREWS
Lancaster Farming Staff

ALLENTOWN (Lehigh Co.) — Donna Strawbridge, daughter of Calvin Lazarus II, was ready to break out the balloons.

Strawbridge was trumpeting the family's 45 years of showing at the Allentown Fair.

And what a way to celebrate, holding up the two large banners for supreme champion boar and supreme gilt late last week at the fair.

Judge Doyle Stepp, Wartrace, Tenn., selected the Duroc February boar shown by Calvin over all boars and breeds the previous day for an excellent representative sample of what makes a boar critical to a breeding program.

Then Stepp, a purebred Yorkshire and Hampshire breeder, selected the Hampshire February gilt as supreme gilt, shown by Donna's son, John.

John, 15, Whitehall, is in the 10th grade at Whitehall High School. John noted that he exercises the homebred gilt about 2-3 times per week.

Both hogs will be taken in October to compete at the Keystone International Livestock Expo (KILE) at the Harrisburg Farm Show Complex.

John has shown at a variety of fairs, including Schuylkill County, Kempton, Kutztown, Pennsylvania Fair, and will be showing at Bloomsburg, KILE, and state Farm Show.

Calvin remarked on the family's success in the 45 years of exhibiting at Allentown.

One year, he said, about 15 years ago, the family took home "all three champions," including market and breed. "That same year we had one or two taking champion at the New York State Fair — the same week!"

To Lazarus, the championship is especially meaningful this year because of the devastating times swine breeders and finishers had to endure in the hog industry and with two droughts in a row. He's been farming for 60 years, he said, and the past two years "were the worst I've seen," he said.

For family farms, "the future looks terrible," Lazarus said. "There's no room for young guys."

He said many farm families are forced to sell a part of the farm so there are enough finances to get young farmers started. And the two terrible calamities — the lowest hog prices in history and the drought — are making it extremely difficult to farm.

Lazarus farms a total of about 1,000 acres. This year, about 200-300 acres, he said, may go unharvested simply because, unless they can harvest 15-20 bushels per acre, it's simply not worth it.

"You can't think about it too long," he said. "It's crazy."

Nonetheless, Lazarus said it is quite an accomplishment to bring competitive, quality hogs to the show year after year.

In the market hog show, for the first time the Allentown market champion banner went to Todd Bennecoff Jr. Todd, 11, is the son of Todd Sr. and Cheryl Bennecoff, Kutztown.

Todd, in the sixth grade at Northwestern Middle School, showed the heavyweight champion, a Duroc/Hampshire crossbred gilt, to supreme market hog.

Calvin Lazarus of Lazarus and Sons won supreme champion boar with this Duroc at the Allentown Fair.

This is the first market hog champion at Allentown for Todd.

Todd Bennecoff Jr., left, won supreme market hog champion last week at Allentown. At right is Doyle Stepp, Wartrace, Tenn., judge.

He has won breed champions in the past several years.

When picking the 295-pound champion heavyweight, judge Doyle Stepp admired the "super-long gilt, a level and long gilt with a lot of dimension, a lot of width underneath, with a lot of ham," he said. "She has a really good design for a market hog."

When picking the hog supreme champion, Stepp noted the gilt was "well-balanced, a super long-sided pig with a lot of foot to her." The hog would have a good loin eye, according to the judge.

Todd has exhibited hogs at Kempton and Schnecksville, in addition to the Pennsylvania Fair. He plans to show at the county roundup, Sullivan County Fair, Bloomsburg, York, KILE, and Farm Show.

At the hog show there were a total of 356 hogs, about 279 breed animals and 77 market swine. There were 37 exhibitors.

Following is a list of show placings.

ALLENTOWN (Lehigh Co.) — A 3-year-old Alpine, "Jemini," captured grand champion of the dairy goat show at the Allentown Fair last week.

Joan Stump, Telford, exhibited the goat.

Stump noted that show judge Todd Biddle, Palmyra, pointed to the goat's overall width and dairy character, in addition to correct feet and legs.

Stump said Allentown Fair is one she looks forward to. "It's one of the nicest fairs around, and one of the biggest and most widely attended," Stump said.

Stump cares for her own herd of 20 goats, what she considers a small but "elite" herd.

Stump has attended a variety of small club shows in the spring. She exhibited at the Kimberton Fair and a few others.

She plans to attend the Northeast Livestock Expo in Timonium, Md., near the end of this month.

The goat show at Allentown included 112 goats and 17 exhibitors. Following is a list of show placings.

'Lucky' Finds A Happy Home

going on in school, we'll give her an extra half hour. Skip or I will do the morning chores. I think Skip loves Lucky as much as anybody," said Shelly.

"I'm out there all the time, even when I don't do chores in the morning," said Mary Catherine who is absolutely grateful for having the chance to experience of raising and showing a calf.

She also gives a lot of credit and thanks to those who have given her this opportunity and to those who have helped her along the way, beginning with the Robinson family of Wellsburg, N.Y., who donated the calf to be raffled.

"I also want to thank the Normans. I had no idea of how she was supposed to act at the fair. I didn't know anything until that one day when they had me come over and showed me how to lead them and how to prepare them for the show," said Mary Catherine. "That was so helpful to me. I had the best time and I learned so much!"

Shelly agrees, "We couldn't believe the day and night difference. For two weeks before she was coming in crying, saying she didn't think she'd be able to control her and that she didn't think she'd be ready for the fair and she wasn't behaving and she really didn't know if she could handle her.

And when she cam home from that showing and fitting day, I looked out and it was a different kid. She had her calf's head up, the calf was walking, Mary was just a different kid. She knew she could do this."

Skip noted that the biggest change he saw in his daughter was her confidence level. "What was happening was that the animal was picking up that Mary wasn't confident, and she was taking advantage of that. Mary then demonstrated her confidence and that made the difference," declared Skip.

From that point on, Mary Catherine walked Lucky every day and learned ways to keep control over the growing yearling as she prepared for the 1999 show season.

"I didn't realize that the spots I had taken her were spots that I was vulnerable to be taken power of. Like, she was uphill and I was downhill, or we were on a steep grassy area or we didn't have the chain halter. I realized my mistakes and I really improved, and so did she."

When she's not working with her animals, Mary Catherine can be found curled up with a book. When she first got the calf, books became not only a source of entertainment, but an immediate source of information.

"I read for fun. It's one of my hobbies. When I get a new animal, I get lots of books. I have books and books and books about how to raise chickens and about your cow. I also love the James Herriot Books," said Mary Catherine.

The family has also garnered information from willing farmers and extension personnel.

"We'd be at Agway over in Middlebury, and all you have to do is say something, and you have a circle around you," said Skip.

"We've received lots and lots of good advice," agrees Shelly.

Winning the calf has opened many doors of opportunity for the Wellsboro Middle School student. As a member of the Liberty Community 4-H Club, she won first place in the junior show and second place in the open show at the Tioga County Fair, and placed fourth in the youth division at the Northeast District Jersey Show. Her 1999 show season came to a stop at the Northeast District 4-H Show and when she stood one place shy of a blue ribbon.

But, if everything goes as planned, she'll be back in the show ring next year as a junior 2-year-old.

"We're trying to decide how to keep her here and milk her and what to do with the calf, said Skip.

Laughs Mary Catherine, "We've had people tell us, oh, you can make butter and cheese! And we've had people offer us their nitrogen tanks for the semen so we can get her bred."

"They've also tried to think of ways to give others the opportunity that they have so enjoyed.

"Do we keep the calf, do we give the calf back to the Robinson family? We also thought that if Patrick was interested, we would give him the opportunity to raise and show. At this point we haven't decided," said Shelly.

"At this point we have a 50-50 chance that it will be a bull," adds Skip.

Any way you look at it, Lucky is one of the luckiest Jersey heifers in Pennsylvania and her caretaker, one of the happiest Jersey owners around.

"Now I don't know what I'd do without her. She is big baby basically," laughed Mary Catherine.

"I've learned so much, like life experiences, like not being afraid to ask advice and things like that."

It's back to school time and we're back to making lunches. Sandwiches are quick and easy, however, we must be wary of the nutritional content of the fillings. Food safety is another issue we must remember when packing lunch.

Peanut butter and jelly sandwiches are the most common sandwiches among school-age children. Although peanut butter is an excellent source of protein, it contains a lot of fat.

Low fat peanut spreads are available but these are made with less peanuts and more sugar. This lower the fat content but also decreases the amount of protein. Use regular peanut butter but use it in moderation to minimize fat. This will make your jar last longer and will be easier for your child to swallow.

Other popular sandwiches such as tuna, chicken, egg or turkey salad are made with mayonnaise. Not only is mayonnaise high in fat and cholesterol, it can become a potential food hazard, when combined with protein foods, if it is not properly refrigerated. Before preparing these sandwiches, determine if there will be a refrigerator available to keep the sandwich cold.

For those of us who work near delis and sub shops and frequent these conveniences, we must become wiser in making lunch choices. Deli sandwiches such as ham and cheese, turkey clubs and BLT's tend to be high in fat and sodium. Many times these sandwiches are made with mayonnaise, cheese or extra fillings which further increase the calories, fat, sodium and cholesterol as well as the cost.

Lean cuts of meat such as turkey and roast beef are better than the fattier deli meats such as salami, bologna, ham, bacon, pastrami, etc. Other fixings such as lettuce, tomato and onions may be used liberally as they do not contribute any fat, cholesterol or sodium. The major culprit of increasing the fat, cholesterol and sodium content of a lunch are the munchies that are often put on the side of a sandwich. Pickles, chips, and other snack chips are packed with sodium and fat.

So, what can we do to make a quick, low fat lunch for kids? The key is creativity. Use whole wheat bread, flour tortillas, or try pita bread. Avoid fatty deli meats and stick to the leaner cuts.

Make your own Lunchables using low fat triscuits or crackers with low fat cheese slices. Offer plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables rather than the high fat cookies, chips and other junk food. Bag air popped popcorn sprinkled with Parmesan cheese or some other seasoning.

For those who are on the go and are faced with going to sub shops, watch carefully who they make your sandwich. They may smother your sandwich with extra mayonnaise or oil increasing the fat and cholesterol.

Instead of mayonnaise, try mustard or perhaps they offer low fat, low cholesterol mayonnaise that you can choose from. Ask them to hold the salt since they sometimes add it automatically. If they overstuff your sandwich, order extra bread and make two (or more) sandwiches. You can share the extra sandwich with a friend or save it for lunch tomorrow.

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

We've finally gotten some rain after two months of nothing. What a change we can see now as the roses are blooming again. There are red ones, pink ones, and several white ones. I'm still looking for the yellow and flame-colored ones.

The beans that I planted several weeks ago never even came up, and now I'm afraid it is too late. Tomatoes and Swiss Chard are about the only things to eat in our garden.

The other day I did a job that is a tradition around here. When school starts, I know it is time to harvest the grapes that grow around the brick smokehouse in the middle of the farm garden. This year I got a couple buckets full and canned grape juice and made grape sauce.

Our daughter and her family were lucky and unlucky as they traveled east to visit over Labor Day weekend. You see, they had a front wheel fly off the car on the Indiana Turnpike traveling 65 to 70 miles per hour. A garage had just put four new wheels and tires on their car. It is a long story, but they are safe.

My husband helped to fill the silo with alfalfa to feed the many heifers on the farm. And, they got it stored before the rain came.

One day we tried our luck at Blue Marsh Lake in Berks County but caught nothing. The week before I took one-half an hour and stood along the Conestoga River near our home. First I caught two small fish, which I threw back. But then, I really caught a big fish. My rod bent as I pulled in an 18-inch catfish. He was very heavy and my husband was kind enough to skin him for me. Some fun.

After Leib's Allentown Supreme, It's On To NAILE, Big E

ANDY ANDREWS
Lancaster Farming Staff

ALLENTOWN (Lehigh Co.) — Bill Leib, statewide FFA vice president, made his mark late last week at the Allentown Fair Sheep Show, winning overall market lamb.

Now it's on to several big shows for the veteran sheep exhibitor — the North American International Livestock Exposition in Louisville, Ky., and the Big E in Massachusetts.

(Not to mention Pennsylvania's own Keystone International Livestock Expo in October and state Farm Show in January.)

In between times Bill, 18, son of Bob and Suzie Leib and Cumberland Valley High School graduate, has to find time to fulfill lots of duties as FFA vice president.

At the market lamb competition, Bill exhibited a yearling Southdown purebred lamb. This is the first time Bill has exhibited the market lamb champion at Allentown, even though he is a veteran of the show, exhibiting ag ed champions and numerous showmanship awards.

The lamb was purchased at a private sale in Virginia.

Judge for the two-day show, which began the Thursday before last and continued on into Friday before last, was Steve Taylor, State College, manager of Lyn-Lee Farms.

There were 230 breed and 26 market sheep, along with 38 exhibitors at the Allentown Fair Sheep Show.

Following is a partial list of show placings.

Don't Pull That Weed

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — To most gardeners, weeds are evil intruders to be eradicated by any means necessary. Don't be so quick to pull them — some weeds are quite nutritious, said a horticulture expert in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences.

"Many weeds are higher in vitamins than most of the entrees served in a restaurant," said Peter Ferretti, professor of vegetable crops.

Ferretti says most edible wild weeds have been consumed by humans for centuries — dating back to before the Stone Age. Only since the dawn of modern agriculture has the wondrous taste of wild weeds disappeared from the human diet.

Still, Ferretti warns that fledgling gourmets should not indiscriminately fry up the compost pile as an entree. "Only eat plants you have positively identified as edible," Ferretti says. "Even after positive identification, eat just a small amount of it in case of an allergic reaction."

Ferretti also says weed eaters should never harvest wild plants that are growing in protected sanctuaries, on private land, near well-traveled roads and highways, or near rights of way or farm fields that may have received pesticide drift.

Ferretti offers insights into a few common and easily identified wild weeds and plants.

• Dandelions. Found in fields across the country, dandelions are very high in iron and Vitamin C. The green leaves of tender or blanched plants can be eaten uncooked in salads.

Dandelions on lawns and other areas treated with pesticides should not be picked and eaten. Older plant leaves can be cooked. The yellow flowers are the primary ingredient in dandelion wine.

Wild Chicory. The root of this plant can be dried and ground and used as a coffee substitute. "The young leaves are delicious in mixed salads, if you enjoy the slight bitter taste of its close relative, radicchio," Ferretti says.

Wild Mustard. "This weed should be picked quite young, or just before its flowers come out," Ferretti says. It grows in rich soils and often is found in old abandoned barnyards.

Wild Garlic, Chives, Leeks. Ferretti recommends picking the leaves from these plants and leaving the bulbs in the soil. "The wild varieties of these crops have much smaller bulbs, and it's a lot of work to dig them up," Ferretti says.

Watercress. An excellent garnish and food, it's high in Vitamins A, C, D and E, as well as iron and calcium. This wild weed is found throughout Pennsylvania in shallow, clear, limestone-based streams. "To grow, watercress requires shallow moving water with still pools and eddies," Ferretti explains. "Most of Pennsylvania's high-country trout streams are perfect locations for watercress."

Watercress' spicy taste makes it perfect as an addition to salads or soups, as a sandwich filler, or chopped up in scrambled eggs. "Watercress is one of the ingredients in V8 cocktail juice," Ferretti says. "If you make your own juices at home, this is a perfect use for watercress."

Purslane. Ferretti calls purslane a prolific weed that grows almost anywhere. Its thick, glossy leaves can be used in salads. In gardens, it will appear early, especially if the gardener has laid down clear plastic mulch or used insufficient organic mulch.

Lamb's Quarters. Related to the beet family, this true weed grows anywhere and appears frequently in backyard gardens. It can grow to three feet in height but only the tips and young tender leaves should be eaten.

"Any type of wild weed should not be collected or eaten unless you have experience in identifying plants, have a good field identification guide and heed all the precautions given by reference books and experienced plant experts," Ferretti says.

The champion pair of goats was sold by Brian Nailor and purchased by Shopps Wayne Feed for $250.

Zachary Ocker, Newville, sold the champion lightweight and reserve champion heavyweight goats. The lightweight weighed 51 pounds and received a bid of $160 from Keith's Farm and Dairy Supplies, and the heavyweight weighed 72 pounds and received a bid of $220 from Agway.

Jennifer Creek, Shippensburg, earned $180 in a bid from Randy Wedde for the reserve champion mediumweight goat weighing 57 pounds, and Zachary Warner, Newville, earned $240 in a bid from J&S Fuels Inc. for his reserve champion lightweight goat that weighed 42 pounds.

Champion pair of market hogs was sold by Jeremy Barrick of Carlisle to Denny McCullough Trucking on a bid of $405. Matthew Creek of Shippensburg, sold the Champion Lightweight Market Hog weighing 232 pounds and bringing a bid of $250 from PACMA, Inc. Josh Barrick of Carlisle sold the reserve champion of $400 from Willard Agri Service; Zachary Warner of Newville sold the reserve champion lightweight market hog on a bid of $215 from Country Butcher Shop and Adams Well Drilling.

Make Insects Allies In Battle Against Pests

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — For most people, the only good bug is a dead bug. But if your garden crops are being attacked by insects, an entomologist in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences say you should think twice before killing everything with six legs.

"Only one percent of insects actually are pests," said Lyn Garling, education specialist with the Pennsylvania Integrated Pest Management (IPM) Program. "Chances are that most insects you encounter are neutral as far as you're concerned. And probably at least 20 percent are, at some point in their lifetime, predators or parasites of other insects."

The difficult part, Garling said, is telling the good bugs from the bad. "When you walk through your garden, think of it as the African Sergeti," she said. "The pests generally are slow moving and eat leaves or fruit the cows of the insect world. The predators tend to be fast moving and quick, with large eyes to seek out prey. They are the lions of the insect world."

Garling said there are abundant beneficial organisms in most gardens. "Wasps, beetles, flies, spiders virtually all orders of arthropods have predators and parasites among them," she explains. "Probably the tree most common beneficial insects in Pennsylvania are ladybird beetles, green lacewings and hover flies."

• Ladybird beetles, commonly referred to as ladybugs, are predators of aphids and other pests. Adults most often are red, orange or yellow with black markings. "Lady beetles in their larval stage are especially voracious," said Garling. "But most people would not recognize a ladybug larva, which has an alligator-like appearance."

• Green lacewings appear mostly in late summer. "They are generalist predators," Garling said. "Adults are pale green,with long antennae and large, transparent wings. The adults feed mostly on nectar and pollen, but their alligator-like larvae eat aphids, spider mites, small caterpillars and other insects, as well as a lot of eggs laid by pests."

• Syrphid flies, or hover files, mostly commonly are yellow with brown or black stripes on the abdomen. "They look like a tiny bee, but they don't sting." said Garling. "Adults often hover around flowers and feed on pollen. The maggot-like larvae are especially fond of aphids."

Garling said to encourage beneficials, plan or modify the garden habitat to provide for their needs. "Like all wildlife, beneficial insects need food, water and shelter," she explained. "The best way to provide those things is to have a diversity of plants in your garden. You should plant a mixture of perennials, biennials and annuals, and make sure there's always something flowering. Flowers are a great source of energy for foraging predators and parasites.

"Also have a range of architecture among your plants – tall, short, vine-like trailing on the ground – because each provides a different habitat," she added. "Establish mulched areas that provide a moist environment, and keep other areas dry and airy."

Purchasing beneficial insects for release in your garden is an option but may not be effective, according to Garling. "There are good companies that supply beneficials for the home garden," she said. "But you have to know the biology of the beneficial to be sure it's going to do what you want it to. For instance, if it's not pest-specific, it may go after other, more abundant pests and not take care of your particular problem. If you have a diverse habitat in your garden, most of the work is being done for you already, so you're probably better off augmenting the natural population you already have."

Garling recommended using caution when applying pesticides in your garden.

Traditionally, garden pesticides have been broad spectrum, meaning they will kill a wide range of insects, including beneficials," she warns. "Before using pesticides, be sure you know what pest is causing your problem. Always carefully read the label instructions, and try to apply the pesticide at a time when beneficial insects are least likely to be present. You also should consider insecticidal soaps, botanicals or other products that are less likely to affect beneficials."

Maryland DHIA Report For August

The August Dairy Herd Improvement information for dairy herds from the DHI processing center in Provo, Utah. The list includes herds from Maryland, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia. The information is listed by herd name, county association, number of cows in the herd and the average production per cow in the herd based on Energy Corrected Milk (ECM). ECM combines milk production and components.

The ECM formula is: (7.2 x lbs. protein) + (12.95 x lbs. fat) + (.327 x lbs. milk). To be included, the herd must have 10 cows averaging 65 pounds or more of ECM per cow, per day. All herds reported are on official DHI or DHIR test. Also listed are the top ten herds in Maryland for the Brown Swiss, Guernseys, and Jerseys, and the top seven herds for Ayrshires.

POULTRY FARMERS MUST RECOGNIZE THE IMPORTANCE OF Campylobacter jejuni INFECTION IN THEIR FLOCKS

Bhushan Jayarao
Extension Veterinarian
Department of Veterinary Science

What's Campylobacter jejuni?

Campylobacter jejuni is a bacterium that is present in the intestines of poultry, wild birds, cattle, swine and rodents and also in household pets such as dogs and cats. This organism has also been detected in untreated water that might have become contaminated with feces.

Why should we be concerned about C. jejuni?

Campylobacter jejuni can cause foodborne illness in humans, which is called campylobacteriosis. People usually become infected with C. jejuni when they eat undercooked poultry or drink raw milk or water that is not chlorinated. C. jejuni can also be transmitted by petting infected dogs and cats, whose coats may be smeared with fecal matter. Symptoms of campylobacteriosis include fever, headache, and muscle pain, followed by diarrhea (watery or bloody), stomach pain, and nausea.

How widespread is C. jejuni infection in humans?

In recent years, C. jejuni has become the most common bacterial cause of diarrheal illness in the United States. It causes more disease than Shigella and Salmonella combined. Scientists at The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimate that more than 2 million people each year become infected with C. jejuni, of which 50 to 70 percent of the infections are caused by improper handling and preparation of poultry.

What has C. jejuni got to do with Guillian-Barre Syndrome?

Recently, Campylobacter has been linked to a serious neurological disorder called Guillian-Barre Syndrome. The symptoms of Guillian-Barre Syndrome include numbness and tingling in the lower limbs, back pain followed by depressed or absent reflexes, and in some cases the facial nerves become affected in most severely affected patients, general paralysis has been observed after about four weeks.

Although Guillian-Barre-Syndrome can affect people of any age, the highest incidence of occurrences takes place between the ages of 50 to 74. Men are affected more commonly than women. It is estimated that in the U.S. 2,628 to 9,575 new cases of Guillian-Barre Syndrome occur each year, of which 526 to 3,830 new cases are triggered by infection with Campylobacter. The cost associated with Guillian-Barre Syndrome caused by Campylobacter is likely to range from $0.2 billion to 1.8 billion. Reducing C. jejuni in food could prevent up to $5.6 billion in costs annually.

How prevalent is C. jejuni in poultry flocks?

The prevalence of C. jejuni in poultry flocks varies considerably, and is likely to have seasonal variation. The highest prevalence (100 percent) of C. jejuni infection in broiler flocks is seen between June through September.

How does C. jejuni gain access, persist, and spread in poultry flocks?

To date, isolation of C. jejuni from newly hatched or one-week-old chickens or their drinkers have not been reported in the literature. Unlike Salmonella, Campylobacter does not appear to be vertically transmitted from one broiler flock to the next via persistent contamination of the broiler house been reported. The major route of Campylobacter colonization of poultry is horizontal transmission from the environment. Chicks do not generally become infected with Campylobacter until they have been in the grow-out house for two to three weeks. Once birds in the flock become infected from environmental sources, it's very likely the entire flock will test positive for Campylobacter.

Campylobacter jejuni persists and survives in the environment of the poultry farm by colonizing insects, rodents, wild birds, dogs, cats, cattle and pigs that are present on the farm. Management of waste, especially litter from poultry farms, is critical. Farm waste, if not stored properly, can lead to contamination of the environment around the poultry farm, including the ground water. When the environment around the poultry farm becomes contaminated with C. jejuni, it's very likely that the poultry farm will encounter periodic infections of C. jejuni in their flocks.

Research conducted in The Netherlands showed that quinolone treatment of Campylobacter colonized broiler chicks was found to induce quinolone resistance under experimental conditions. Therefore, quinolone treatment should not be seen as an answer to the problem of Campylobacter colonization in poultry flocks.

Can Campylobacter be controlled on poultry farms?

Extensive investigations conducted by researchers in The Netherlands have shown that hygienic measures taken, especially during the rearing period, may significantly reduce the risk of C. jejuni infections in broiler flocks. These include: washing hands before tending broiler flocks, the use of separate boots for each broiler house, and use of a footbath disinfection when entering broiler house.

How do poultry carcasses become contaminated in the processing plant?

Birds that are infected with C. jejuni usually carry this organism in the crop and cecal contents. Isolation of cross contamination during processing is the primary pathway through which poultry carcasses become infected. A study conducted by researchers in Texas clearly showed that Campylobacter contamination of crop contents may exceed that of cecal contents by as much as 37-fold in some broiler flocks, and may represent a critical preprocessing control point in reducing Campylobacter entry into the processing plant. The same researchers observed that preharvest feed withdrawal increases the frequency of Campylobacter crop contamination and could become a source of Campylobacter contamination of carcasses at commercial processing.

How prevalent is C. jejuni in raw poultry meat and eggs?

A study conducted by the Food Safety Inspection Service showed that 88.2 percent of the broilers tested were positive for Campylobacter. Other studies that examined retail poultry have shown that anywhere from 22 to 100 percent of the poultry carcasses tested positive for C. jejuni.

There are no reports to suggest that eggs are contaminated with C. jejuni. A study conducted in North Carolina showed that 69 percent of raw commercial broilers were positive for C. jejuni. The highest recovery rates for C. jejuni were from May through October, and the lowest were in December and January. This suggests that there is a seasonal effect on the detectability and the Carrier State of C. jejuni in broilers at retail markets.

What safety precautions do consumers have to take at home while preparing chicken?

Mishandling of raw poultry and consumption of undercooked poultry are the major risk factors for human campylobacteriosis. Safe handling practices of raw poultry in the kitchen are needed to prevent illness. Unlike Salmonella, Campylobacter is not able to replicate outside the chicken carcass — a small amount on a kitchen counter will not become a major source of contamination. However, any leak or drip from carcasses has to be thoroughly cleaned and the counter top thoroughly disinfected.

The number of viable Campylobacter organisms decreases over time at refrigeration temperatures. Campylobacter is easily killed by ordinary cooking temperatures. Cooking oil poultry products thoroughly can reduce the incidence of human campylobacteriosis. The meat should be cooked throughout (inside cooked to 170°F for breast meat and 180°F for thigh meat). Wash hands with soap before and after handling raw chicken. If possible, use separate cutting boards. Carefully clean the cutting boards, knives, and other utensils before and after with soap and hot water.

Dairy Competitiveness To Be Discussed At Review

LONDON, Ohio — Ohio's dairy industry is headed for some major changes in the next few years, and many farms in Ohio have to be ready to change with the industry.

Ernie Oelker, an agriculture agent for Ohio State University Extension in Trumbull County will discuss the keys to having a successful and competitive dairy farm in the next millennium at the upcoming Farm Science Review on Wednesday, Sept. 22 at 9:30 a.m. The Review runs Sept. 21-23.

Oelker will be covering specific measures that dairy farmers can use to calculate their competitiveness, such as pounds of milk sold per worker, milking herd feed costs per hundredweight of milk sold, operating costs as a percent of gross income, herd growth, income per owner/ operator family, dairy investment per cow, and keeping a motivated labor force.

"Competitiveness and profitability are synonymous," Oelker said. Recent findings by an Ohio State University Extension project say herd size should expand 60 percent every 10 years to stay competitive. In a recent report, Cameron Thraen, a dairy economist at Ohio State, said that farmers should increase their herd size 3 percent every year to stay competitive. At this rate, farmers should double their operations every seven to 10 years. Despite the differences in projected expansion rates, there is a common thread between expanding herd size and survival in the industry.

Producers also have to be willing to constantly improve, modernize, adopt new technologies, and become better managers, marketers and problem-solvers. However, it is not necessary for all dairy farmers to expand to survive. It is possible for small operations to be as successful as large operations if the small operations have excellent management, Thraen said in the report.

Tickets for the Farm Science Review are available from county offices of Ohio State Extension and from local agribusinesses. Tickets are $4 in advance and $6 at the gate. Children 5 and younger are admitted free. Review hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday, and 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday.

Top Producers Choose Knight!

Congratulations to the La-Foster Farm

Terry and Gerald Foster are very proud of their record-breaking cow, Lucy, and rightly so. She produced 75,260 pounds of milk in her last lactation. They are also pleased with their Knight Reel Auggie® mixers, which, combined with the Foster's excellent management practices, have propelled the La-Foster herd average to the #1 milk production status in North Carolina. There is no comparison to the complete, palatable blend from a Knight Reel Auggie, with its patented reel and auger blending combination. Why else would the La-Foster Farm choose only Knight to feed their record-setting herd?

She just freshened - How long until she reaches her peak?

Reduce the chance of milk fevers and DA's by targeting each ration to each group of cows. The NDA Vertical Mixer will allow you to cut and blend long-stemmed hay (large or small, round or square bales) with all other feed stuffs, making a palatable, easily digestible ration for your just-fresh cows. By starting with lots of hay in the mix, then gradually reducing the hay until they are on full feed, you will get them to peak production faster, and improve your bottom line.

FARMERS ARE LOYAL TO HOOBER'S SALESMEN BECAUSE THEY ARE EXPERTS AT TAILORING EQUIPMENT PACKAGES

RENT

"The rental program Hoober has come up with works out real well for me It's been very cost effective because I don't have to put a lot of cash at risk. Plus, I don't have to worry about having a large machinery payment hanging over my head Anytime you get a dealer like Hoober who's willing to work with you, it makes life a little easier"

Roger Woolf
Washington, New Jersey

LEASE

"For us leasing is really worthwhile and important from the maintenance standpoint because we have a lot of acres to cover Everything's under warranty and we don't have any real problems anyway since the equipment is new And when it comes to service, Hoober couldn't be any better"

Donald Lippy Lippy Bros Farms
Hampstead, MD

OWN

"I made the decision to buy a new MX 170 from Hoober for two simple reasons One I like Case IH tractors I like them because of their reliability, and second I bought it because Hoober backs it with top-notch service For my operation, that is the ideal combination"

Glen Engle - Silver Maple Farms
Cochranville, PA

Our smallest baler comes with BIG features

Our Model 638 Roll-Belt™ round baler is the smallest in the line, but it has the same features and functions as New Holland's larger balers. You can count on dense, uniform 4-ft.-by-4-ft. bales every time.

- Roll-Belt design makes uniform bales weighing up to 750 lbs.
- Requires a minimum 40 PTO hp tractor
- Single-arm twine system reduces wrapping time by applying two strands
- Road/trailing lights are included

See the NEW Model 638 today!

BUSINESS ❖ NEWS

Cargill Unit 'District Of Year'

LIVERPOOL, N.Y. — The Cargill Animal Nutrition business unit here was recently recognized as "District of the Year" during ceremonies in Minneapolis, Minn. Cargill, the largest privately held U.S. corporation, operates 118 animal feed manufacturing facilities worldwide.

Cargill Animal Nutrition's Liverpool District services clients in seven states. Six production facilities are located in Gouverneur, N.Y.; Alexander, N.Y.; Liverpool, N.Y.; Lebanon, Pa.; Roaring Spring, Pa.; and Walkersville, Md.

"District of the Year" is awarded to the business unit with the best performance in areas of safety, customer satisfaction, business growth, teamwork, and financial results.

District General Manager John Griffin said, "We are fortunate to have 123 associates who wake up every day thinking about solutions for our clients and the welfare of their co-workers. Our Roaring Spring and Gouverneur branches have each operated for more than a decade without a lost time accident. The Liverpool branch has completed seven accident-free years, and the Lebanon branch has never had an accident. Exceptional results come from outstanding people!"

During the same ceremonies, the Gouverneur plant was recognized as one of only eight "World Class" facilities. Four individuals were appointed to the 1999 President's Club for outstanding individual results: Rod Isham sales manager, Enola, Pa.; Ken Otis, Dairy Management Consultant, Cornwall, Pa.; Scott Doyle, plant manager, Copenhagen, N.Y. and Karen Barie, territory manager, Jamestown, N.Y. They won a trip to Vancouver, British Columbia in October.

Pioneer Breaks Ground On New Seed Production Facility

MCLEANSBORO, Ill. — Pioneer Hi-Bred International, Inc. (NYSE: PHB) officially broke ground on a new seed production facility in Hamilton County just north of McLeansboro, Ill, near the intersection of Interstate 64 and Highway 242. The plant will be used to produce Pioneer (R) brand soybean seed in the Group IV and V maturity range.

The $10 million operation, which should be completed within a year, is expected to produce two million 50-pound bags of soybean seed when running at full capacity. Pioneer has contracted with a select group of area growers to produce up to 50,000 acres of soybeans across several southern Illinois counties within the next few years.

The facility is expected to employ 15 full-time and 15 part-time seasonal workers.

"Demand for Pioneer brand soybeans has been growing at an incredible rate," said Mark Batchelder, director of soybean production operations for Pioneer. The McLeansboro plant is an example of our efforts to deliver a broad line-up of top-performing, high-quality seed to Pioneer customers. Right now, we're challenged to stay ahead of the rapidly growing demand for Pioneer soybean seed, and that's a great challenge to have."

A consistent yield advantage over competitive varieties has fueled the growth. In 1998, Pioneer leader soybeans with the Roundup Ready gene held a 2.1-bushel yield advantage over competitive Roundup Ready products, based on nearly 4,000 comparisons.

Pioneer is the leading soybean seed brand in North America and has been for nine years. The estimated North American market share for Pioneer brand soybeans has grown to nearly 19 percent in 1999 from 13.5 percent in 1990.

Pioneer looked at several locations in southern Illinois before deciding the Hamilton County site best met the company's needs. The criteria included state size, convenient transportation access, proximity to quality growing environments and a favorable local economic climate.

"This is a perfect site," said Batchelder. "The Hamilton County Economic Development Commission and the Hamilton County Board of Supervisors were very helpful in the site selection process."

The McLeansboro facility is only one of many Pioneer soybean production operations within Illinois. In 1999, Pioneer completed construction on an $8.5 million facility in Woodhull and expanded its Litchfield plant. Improvements also were made to the Leroy plant in 1996. A parent seed production plant is located in Shelbyville, and three Pioneer research centers are strategically positioned throughout the state.

The Litchfield expansion and the new facilities in Woodhull and McLeansboro will increase soybean production 5.5 to 6 million units in Illinois over just a few years — that's a 100 percent increase in production capacity.

Topdresser Can Spread Year-Round

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster County) — The Earth & Turf MultiSpread™ Topdresser is an exclusive ground-driven unit designed to spread year-round. Spread compost and topdressing materials during spring, summer, and fall. Spread sand, salt, and ice melt in the winter.

The Earth and Turf MultiSpread™ Topdresser services both large and small areas. Its narrow design permits easy access through standard 42-inch openings and easy maneuverability on sidewalks. The finely adjusted thrower paddles and adjustable spring tines break up materials to create a uniform spread pattern up to 66-inches for larger turf areas and parking lots. A rubber belt moves the desired materials to the thrower paddles. The adjustable flow rate gate allows material to be applied as evenly and finely as desired. An internal baffle suspends materials, providing easy start-up.

The Earth & Turf MultiSpread™ Topdresser is an exclusive ground-driven unit designed to spread year-round.

The Multi-Spread™, with its 3/4 cubic yard hopper, is designed and built for professional use. The heavy gauge steel MultiSpread™ is finished with a powder coat paint which resists corrosion. The MultiSpread™ attaches to commercial mowers, compact tractors, and utility vehicles via an adjustable hitch. Loading chute extensions are available as an option for easy loading.

Heritage Celebration Oct. 2-3

WYOMISSING (Berks Co.) — Berks County Heritage Center, on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 2-3, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. both days, will be the site of the 18th Annual Heritage Celebration.

Come explore our area's rich historical heritage through demonstrations, a carriage and wagon show, music, lectures, arts and crafts, children's activities, and a Pennsylvania German dialect program.

Throughout the year, visitors to the Gruber Wagon Works are promised, "Yes, the Otto Engine does run." Well, the time is coming soon for the one weekend a year when you'll be instantly transported back to 1915, as the original engine that powered the Gruber Wagon Works comes to life again. Heritage is easily forgotten in everyday life, but the Berks County Parks and Recreation Department hopes to recover a small slice of history during this festival weekend.

The putt-putt of the Otto engine will not be the only engine sounds heard. Saturday's portion of the festival features an antique auto display, showcasing cars from the earliest models through 1959, as well as a display of antique farm equipment. The Old Time Plow Boys Club will coordinate a Children's Pedal Tractor Pull at 2 p.m. (registration is required the day of the event).

Featured at 1 p.m. the International Award-winning Rajah Temple Mounted Patrol will demonstrate their outstanding mounted drills and formations on horseback. It will be a show the whole family won't want to miss.

Throughout the day Saturday, Ken Reinard will present a colonial fly-fishing program. A variety of walks and lectures are planned to cover topics on the herb garden, Deppen Cemetery, Wertz's "Red" Covered Bridge, and presentations by the Berks County Canal Tenders.

In addition, there will be plowing and horse pulling exhibitions, along with a horse and wagon obstacle course. If you have your own carriage, sing up for the Pleasure Drive, which leaves the grounds and travels on the roads surrounding the park area.

Sunday also features a celebration of the customs and lifestyles of the Pennsylvania German heritage.

Other programs are included. Refreshments are available both days.

Case Introduces No-Till Air Drill

RACINE, Wis. — Case Corporation introduces the Case IH SDX30 single-disk opener no-till air drill, a drill designed to plant crops in high residue with minimal disturbance.

Combined with the Case IH Concord air system, the SDX30 provides growers with a highly productive and flexible no-till seeding system.

"The SDX30 single-disk opener no-till air drill is built to withstand the toughest conditions encountered during seeding," said Bill Weber, associate marketing manager for Case. "The heavy-duty frame members provide the strength and weight necessary for high-speed operation and maximum productivity with its 30-foot working width, while maintaining flexibility."

The Case IH SDX30 air drill provides numerous other benefits including low soil disturbance, single disk-type planting, penetration of high residue conditions and minimum side wall compaction.

The new Case IH SDX30 single disk opener no-till air drill provides an effective way to plant crops with minimal disturbance in all conditions. Combined with the Case IH Concord Air system, the SDX30 creates a complete seeding system to deliver multiple products efficiently and economically.

The design of the SDX30 allows the grower to seed in conventional tillage conditions with approximately 250 pounds of down pressure on each opener. However, up to 500 pounds of force per opener can be used to seed directly into pasture, sod or other extreme soil conditions.

With added distance between the ranks for a total of 61 inches, residue flows easily, virtually eliminating plugging. The toolbar's open design allows easy access to each row opener of the sub-bar mounted to the two independent ranks. The down pressure for each sub-bar can be adjusted separately, or each sub-bar can be locked up for row crop configurations.

"The range of down pressure adjustments on each individual opener ensures uniform seed depth and a consistent seed placement," said Weber. "For example, to obtain uniform seed depth of openers running in tire tracks, a grower can adjust the down pressure individually on those openers. Also, seeding depth is easily adjusted in 0.25-inch increments from 0 to 3.5-inches. No tools are required."

The Case IH SDX30 single disk has a 5-degree angle with a diameter of 22.5 inches, the largest in the industry. "The large disk is built to effectively cut through residue and debris, leaving a furrow in which to place the seed. It is a superior design that promotes better root development and higher yield," said Weber.

The unique 5-degree angle of the opener disk and the Case IH Early Riser gauge wheel work together to reduce side wall compaction. This gauge wheel has an inverted profile that leaves loose soil on top to be pressed around the seed. These features give the SDX30 performance advantages over other drills in a wide range of soil and tillage conditions.

Cropheads Match Capacity Of New Forage Harvesters

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.) — To keep pace with New Holland's new higher capacity pull-type forage harvesters, two new windrow pickup heads and one new row-crop head have been introduced by New Holland. All three cropheads are PTO-style shaft driven for easier hookup and removal.

The new windrow pickup heads, Model 27P, and Model 29P, have increased capacity to match New Holland's new Model FP230 and FP240 pull-type forage harvesters.

Model 27P measures 6-foot 4-inches (tine to tine). Model 29P is the largest windrow pickup head in the industry. It provides a wide 7-foot 8-inch pickup for top capacity and productivity and features a heavy-duty auger, finger feed and rubber-mounted tines.

The row-crop head, Model 3PN, provides straight-line feeding and uniform length of cut, and offers more capacity than previous models.

Completion packages are available for fitting these new cropheads to older New Holland Model 900 pull-type forage harvesters.

Evaluate Cow 'Employees' With Goals, Plan

TAMMY WEAVER
Pennsylvania Beef Council Director of Industry Relations

Moving away from single measures toward a comprehensive culling approach requires a mindset change – from allowing the cow to make the removal decision to taking charge of strategic decision-making. Evaluating cow "employees" with a strategic culling plan allows the dairy producer to increase herd culling rates and net returns per cow at the same time.

"If we look at dairying like beef or swine production—as a throughput—then the idea is to get the wheel to turn at the right time," said Dr. David Gallagan, animal health economics researcher at the University of Pennsylvania New Bolton Center.

Gallagan is one of many researchers currently studying ways to identify potential culls early and make planned culling strategies more palatable to producers.

"Every cow gets culled. The objective is do it at the best time, to make every margin dollar work optimally for the dairy."

While the beef value losses from delayed culling decisions are clearly documented in real dollars, the lost opportunities for the herd are variable from farm to farm.

To capitalize on those opportunities, the dairy manager needs a well-defined culling plan that is linked to clearly identified herd goals. This way, monitoring and marketing become cost-efficient, goal-oriented management tools.

Plan Progress

There are many ways to evaluate cow "employees." Set goals and create a plan to prioritize herd progress in areas such as milk production, somatic cell count for quality premiums, days open, days in milk, and genetic improvement. Then evaluate individual triggers such as transfer of genetic merit, production versus breakeven, first lactation mature equivalencies, reproduction health, injury of disease event, body condition, mobility and time and cost of treatment.

Some key goal setting questions to ask include Are we culling to.... improve genetics? Meet a higher production threshold? Lower disease rate? Reduce somatic cell count? A review of herd and individual records helps prioritize the herd goals and plan the culling strategies by dictating the critical "triggers" and defining what is expected for the "employee" to keep her milking job.

A three-year study of 260 herds in the upper Midwest revealed that 40 percent of 20,000 culls were recorded as reason "unknown." This "unknown" territory represents missed opportunities. Even the most sophisticated management software requires good information and decision-making to be useful.

Review Records

Develop and evaluate the culling plan by recording the reason for each animal culled. Periodically review the herd-culling rate – specifically the reasons and ratio of forced to unforced decisions. At the same time, monitor herd progress

Crops Ready To Harvest At Farm Science Review

LONDON, Ohio — despite dry conditions across Ohio, crops will be ready to harvest for demonstrations at this year's Farm Science Review, Sept. 21-23.

"We're looking at three-fourths of a normal crop for corn, and a relatively normal crop of soybeans," said Craig Fendrick, Farm Science Review manager. "That means we'll still have plenty of acreage to harvest."

The Farm Science Review, Sept. 21-23, is an educational event sponsored by Ohio State University's College of Food, Agricultural, and Environmental Sciences. It typically attracts about 130,000 farmers to the Molly Caren Agricultural Center just north of London, Ohio.

There, visitors can browse through 83 acres of exhibits from farm machinery, seed, pesticide, and other agricultural companies. They can see equipment in action during field demonstrations, listen to educational programs and visit with experts from Ohio State University Extension and the Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center.

"The Review offers the latest in farm technology and top experts in agriculture," Fendrick said. "We like to think of it as the must-see agricultural event of the year."

The Review site includes the Gwynne Conservation Area with 40 acres devoted to natural resources, providing landowners with information about everything from timber stand improvement to streambank stabilization. On Sept. 22, a program titled "Living with the Land" will demonstrate how settlers survived and thrived in their natural resources environment.

Tours and programs through the Utzinger Gardens provide the latest information about gardening for homeowners.

Among this year's highlights:

- The Natural Resources Interpretive Center at the Gwynne will be under construction. When completed, the 3,000 square-foot log cabin, including porch and deck, will provide a location for year-round educational programs.
- Displays and educational programming on agronomic crops and site-specific farming will be located near the grain-drying facilty on the grounds, allowing easier access for farmers viewing machinery demonstrations.
- A new grain bin and grain handling system is up and running.
- Visitors will also find new permanent toilet facilities, 1,800 feet of new asphalted walkways, and a new emergency services building, located near the center of the grounds.

Tickets for the event are $4 in advance from county offices of OSU Extension and agribusinesses and are $6 at the gate. Children 5 and younger are admitted free. Hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sept. 21-22 and 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sept. 23. For more information, check out the Farm Science Review website at (http://www.ag.ohiostate.edu/~ofsr/).

Scholars Attend Youth Institute

SHIPPENSBURG (Cumberland Co.) — Four scholars from the Susquehanna-Union -Northumberland (SUN) Council of Pennsylvania Council of Cooperatives (PCC) recently completed a four-day Youth Institute at Shippensburg University.

In attendance were Amos Aurand, Heidi Good, Jennifer McWilliams, and Jessica Walter.

The 1999 Summer Youth Institute was the 39th in a series that began in 1960. The institute is designed to enhance scholars' understanding and appreciation of cooperatives, issues of concern to cooperatives, and develop leadership skills.

Scholars are sponsored to the institute by local and regional cooperatives operating in the Susquehanna, Union, and Northumberland County area.

The summer institute is a joint effort of Pennsylvania Council of Cooperatives and the Penn State Cooperative Business Education and Research Program (CBERP).

Local scholars were joined by more than 80 scholars and adult resource leaders from across Pennsylvania.

Faculty and staff for the institute included cooperative leaders, Penn State faculty and staff, agricultural education teachers, and volunteers from the cooperative sector.

Penn State Lady Lion Swimmer Melinda Rehm inspired the scholars with her inspirational talk on setting and achieving goals.

In addition to cooperative basics and planned leadership building activities, scholars learned about new developments and opportunities in biotechnology in a presentation by Terry Sharrer of the Smithsonian Institute.

A highlight of the Institute each year is the awards dinner, during which 11 scholars, including Amos Aurand, were awarded scholarships to attend the National Institute on Cooperative Education (NICE) in Snow Bird, Utah, July 26-29.

Evaluate Cow 'Employees' With Goals, Plan

toward identified goals, and culling rate against margin per cow. Look for patterns and respond to them by adjusting the plan or setting new goals.

Record body condition score at the time of sale, as well as mobility, treatment information and length and cost of treatment. Track the number of reasons for removal of first lactation heifers to get a handle on the herd replacement program.

This information will identify the strengths and weaknesses in the plan and its implementation – particularly the aspects of observation and decision-making. At the same time, this awareness will raise the value of cull animals sold from the farm and improve overall herd management skills.

Observe Often

DHIA records offer excellent performance indicators for evaluating the cows, individually and as a herd. But strategic culling requires regular review of these records and close daily observations of the cows. This is particularly important as herds move from stanchion to freestall environments where cow recognition becomes more challenging and managers go not immediately notice the early-warning off-feed cow in bunk delivery systems. Modern dairy systems also offer more flexibility in the number of milking cows in the herd, removing stall availability as a compelling force for evaluating animals and to make room for replacements.

Pay close attention to the cows at milking. Make the extra effort to visually appraise and be familiar with cow appearance and behavior to catch potential problems before they show up in the herd test.

Specifically, score body condition. This will improve many areas of herd management and the beef market value of cull animals.

Watch the cows walk as they enter the milking area. Assess mobility, check for injuries, and evaluate swollen arthritic joint conditions for treatment or removal.

Check eyes for signs of ocular neoplasia (cancer eye) which begins as small white plaques. When culled in later stages, carcass condemnation losses will likely result.

Evaluate and treat mastitis problems early. Make udder-related culling decisions early. Don't wait for udders to become swollen and painfully distended.

Examine mouths at least once a year. Healthy animals have eight teeth on the bottom jaw. Broken, gappy teeth mean not enough forage, and consequently not enough milk.

Work with the veterinarian when evaluating cows with health conditions. When disease events occur, know the meat withdrawal for the drug being considered. Then decide. If she doesn't show a good chance of recovery before treatment, will there be time after the withdrawal period to make the culling decision before double losses occur.

When making treatment and culling decisions, use the strategic culling plan as a guide. The plan is the vehicle for achieving herd goals.

"HI-MOISTURE SHELLED CORN"

You know the advantages of hi-moisture shelled corn versus dry corn for animal feeding. So now consider the MANY ADVANTAGES of POURED CONCRETE to store and protect your valuable grain.

Our 6" thick concrete walls reflect 38% of light beams, resulting in 780 times more heat-resisting ability than steel, and 25 times more insulating power than steel."

"Our 6" thick walls have a very low leak potential compared to pre-lab silos of any kind, and a very low maintenance requirement."

Metal Roofs aren't Created Equal

Everlast II is better:
- it is galvanized heavier, like old times.
- it is heat formed, less paint cracks.
- is cut while hot, prevents early edge rust.
- won't scratch as easy, paint is harder.
- won't bend or buckle as easy, stronger design.
- laps are tighter, and virtually invisible.
- nails/screws seal better, ribs fit tighter to head.
- zinc phosphate, not chromate under paint.
- still priced about the same or less.

Everlast II
is excellent for houses and barns.
Double dipped galvanized is proven best for animals.

6 DAIRY EQUIPMENT

Lapp's Curtain System

Lapp's insulated curtains can help you make your farm more efficient. You can save up to 30% on your fuel'energy costs while maintaining a comfortable climate enables livestock to feed into live weight more efficiently, the curtain makes your barn warmer in winter and cooler in summer.

Our curtains are available in both 4 and 6 ply, both of which are faced with an impervious white vinyl layer which faces the elements. With all these benefits, the average payback is two years!

A lower cost alternative to the insulated curtains, are Lapp's single layer curtains. You still get all lthe benefits of using a high quality curtain keep the elements outside and being able to lower the curtain to naturally ventilate in your barn.

We also repair other brand curtains.

GOLDEN PRO 46 XP
This natural, mechanically extruded and expelled soybean product is experiencing great acceptance with local dairymen. A course golden colored meal with a 6% fat content, Golden Pro 46 XP is extremely palatable. Golden Pro 46 XP is a natural way to bring the value of high by-pass protein into diets that require a lower fat level.

GOLDEN MEAL 40
An 18 percent fat content along with a 40 percent crude protein makes this mechanically extruded meal product a valuable component in a variety of rations. Full fat content gives you a high level of digestible energy, while high temperature extruding ruptures the oil cells for better nutritional absorbtions.

CRUDE SOYBEAN OIL
A product of Keystone's expelling process, this oil can be used in a wide variety of on farm applications. A natural alternative to animal fats, this oil provides needed energy in various rations.

KITTANNING (Armstrong Co.) — Armstrong County cattleman George Kepple is advocating agricultural philosophies that would be regarded as heresy on some American farms.

Kepple tells other cattlemen not to buy lime and fertilizer. Instead of acquiring more of the latest, technologically-advanced farm machinery, he's selling the equipment he already has. And this fall he may even allow his cattle to eat his standing corn.

"My cattle are going to become the primary harvesters of my crops," Kepple said recently, adding that he's trying to shun anything that "rots, rusts, and depreciates."

His farming philosophy is winning him recognition. This spring he received one of five state pasture producer awards given by the Pennsylvania Forage and Grasslands Council. And his 130-acre "Kittanning Hollow Farm" in Sugarcreek Township won the 1998 Armstrong County Conservation District Rotational Grazier Award.

He presented his views on rotational and intensive grazing during a pasture seminar at the Pennsylvania Cattlemen's Association convention in State College late in July.

Kepple is striving to make his farm as labor-independent as possible, because he has other interests. He's also an attorney and maintains a private law practice in Kittanning, a 20-minute drive from his farm. He was his county's district attorney from 1978 to 1998, and was the Republican nominee for state senator in the 41st District in 1996.

He also wants more time to spend with his wife and two college-age children.

LEOLA (Lancaster Co.) — Alfalfa producers can't control the weather. But with the spray application of an amine nitrogen stubble treatment, yields can be increased and, best of all, nutrient value of the crop can be improved.

After first cutting alfalfa late in the spring this year, Leola dairyman Paul Reiff applied the solution at a cost of $7.35 per acre to alfalfa fields and saw a corresponding increase in the quality of hay he cut on the farm.

Despite what some consider the worst Pennsylvania drought in history, with rainfall already at time of second cutting three inches below normal, early on in the season, the cool weather produced what Reiff considered a bumper crop of alfalfa, which led to improved growth and a boost in protein levels of the crop.

And the same combination of good weather, "where you hope for rain," he said, "that's the kind of weather I like for alfalfa," and use of the spray application worked some wonders on the

But as a grazing farm we are better able to handle a drought with a little foresight and a plan. For us that plan includes, first, making additional hay for a 60-day feeding program. We use net-wrapped round bales stored in a paddock along a wooded fence row that protects the bales from the afternoon sun. If not needed it is the first hay fed in November.

Second, we do not graze our paddocks short – we leave an extra inch or so from normal. This results in a one-day paddock only providing a half day of grazing. Therefore we use up our permanent paddocks quicker. The hay fields are used for the usual August slump in pasture growth. We are about two grazings behind a normal year.

Third, our orchard/grass/alfalfa mixed hay/pasture fields held up for an extra cutting or grazing than did the bluegrass, or orchard grass, or white clover paddocks. In a cool, wet year, all of the above would provide excellent grazing forage.

Fourth, we use our New Holland haybine to clip all pastures that have old over-mature alfalfa or dead-top orchardgrass at about 4 inches in height. With the first good rain, we can get 3 inches to 4 inches of new growth on our orchardgrass. As I write this, Aug. 20, this is what happened on our farm as a result of a 4-inch rain Friday, Aug. 13.

Fifth, in order to conserve feed and prevent overgrazing, we weaned our calves Aug. 1, one month early. Calves were put on good hay and the dry cows were put on old grass on waterways and diversion. They are now being fed round bale hay that was stored outside the past two months. The stocker cattle continue to thrive on green pasture.

For those producers that need to buy hay or have hay to sell, contact HayNet – a service of Penn State Cooperative Extension. You can view the list on the Internet or by visiting any office of Penn State Cooperative Extension or USDA Farm Service Agency.

I recently received a letter from the USDA Risk Management Agency (RMA). RMA has been charged by congress to continue development of the farm safety net throughout the expansion of the current crop insurance program. Forage is one of the largest segments of agriculture that does not have a successful, producer-accepted crop insurance program.

Do you have any ideas that would improve the program already in place? Should an entirely different concept be developed? What type of insurance program for forage crops should be developed? If you would be interested in attending a meeting to help RMA develop a producer-accepted crop insurance program, call or write me, giving your name, address, and telephone number. If you have an idea of how to fix the existing program, contact USDA-RMA, 4407 Bland Road, Suite 150, Raleigh, NC 27609.

Attention graziers. If you are a grazier who plants annual forage crops, you may be interested in trying a bag of Abundant, a tetraploid annual ryegrass. the feed instead of taking the feed to the cattle, and the longer I can extend the pasture season, the less time I'm investsing, the less hay I have to make, the less machinery I need," he said.

Kepple grew up on the farm and helped his parents run it as a dairy operation. His father retired and sold the dairy herd in 1987, and about five years ago Kepple sought advice when he started raising beef cattle. The Armstrong County Conservation District suggested he consider a pasture rotation system for his herd that now includes 70 mixed-breed Piedmontese, Angus, and Limousin cattle.

Kepple has divided the farm's 40 acres of pastureland into 15 paddocks, each two to three acres in size. Every two to three days the herd is turned into a new paddock, and the paddock they left is not grazed again for another 30 to 40 days.

"You make them eat just about all the grass that's there," Kepple said. "They just can't take the gravy and move on."

If the cows were allowed to eat just what they wanted, they'd overgraze those favorite grasses, weakening the root systems, he said.

"The ideal is to turn them into six inches of grass" in a new paddock, perhaps even 10-inch tall grass during the spring, Kepple said.

Several of the paddocks are outlined by permanent electrified wire fencing, but Kepple can change the paddock confirugations and create new paddocks by quickly stringing semipermanent polywire fence suspended on Fiberglas poles.

"I can secton off a three-acre paddock in half-an-hour to an hour, and they'll pasture in there for three days."

And all Kepple needs to make the change is an armload of poles, a reel of wire, and a hammer.

"I probably don't have $200 in all my temporary fencing," he said.

The ability to reconfigure the paddocks is especially important in dry weather. Through the first 18 days of June Kepple's farm received only a half-inch of rain. When pasture grass doesn't recover as quickly as it would with normal precipitation, he creates new temporary paddocks, even on hay fields.

"If you're using all the grass you grow, it makes the drought less severe," he said.

Last summer was very dry in Armstrong County, and Kepple's second crop of hay wasn't worth harvesting, so she sectioned off his hay fields into paddocks for grazing.

"I always pasture the third crop off," he said.

Kepple has another suggestion for squeezing more pasture space out of a farm.

"Before you spend money on equipment and fertilizer, fence your whole farm in," just as most farms were a century ago.

Kepple's entire farm is enclosed with an estimated two miles of perimeter fencing. Polywire for temporary paddocks can be attached to the perimeter fence at almost any point, giving his cattle access to more grass, even the grass growing between the trees on the property lines.

"I have doubled the utilization of my pasture since I went to rotational grazing," he said.

With some planning, water can be conveniently provided for each paddock. Six of Kepple's rectangular paddocks are adjacent. A gate at one end of each paddock can be left open to give the cattle access to a common area with a water trough near a farm pond. The same trough serves all six paddocks.

Every two or three days, Kepple's herd of mixed-breed beef cattle are turned into a fresh pasture paddock. The herd bull is "Mr. Easy Does It," a 1,500-pound, 4-year-old full-blood Piedmontese.

At another location on the farm, six other paddocks share a common watering site. Kepple said his cows don't have to walk more than 1,000 feet for water.

In late August to October when dry weather begins to stifle his pasture, Kepple wants to use his 10-acre cornfield as supplemental pastureland. He'll partition the corn in to paddocks and allow the cows to eat the standing stalks and ear.

By planting some fields in fescue, a waxy grass that remains green well into winter, Kepple was able to pasture his cattle last year until Dec. 15. His goal this winter is not to start feeding hay until Jan. 1.

"I'll never winter my cattle in a barn," he said. Instead, from January until early April, the cattle will be kept in one pasture area where Kepple will feed them hay. As early in the spring as possible he'll turn the herd back into the paddocks and the well-manured winter area will be plowed under and planted in corn.

This low-maintenance approach to cattle raising has allowed Kepple to rid his farm of much of its "heavy metal." He no longer has a manure spreader and hopes to eventually sell his corn picker, silage harvester, silage wagons, and corn crib.

A trench silo is no longer needed and he has feed trough he hasn't used in five years.

After more of the machinery is sold, he may raze a couple of outbuildings on the farm, reducing his property tax.

To keep abreast of new developments in intensive grazing, Kepple attends seminars on pasture systems two or three days a year, and hosts field days on his farm. It was at a seminar that he learned about frost seeding. In February he spreads white clover seed on his pasture. His cows like the clover, and it fixes nitrogen in the soil for other grasses, cutting fertilizer costs.

"I'm selling my beef by the half here in the community, and I'm selling it as grass-fed beef," which is leaner than grain-fed beef, he said.

Kepple has planted some of his pasture in fescue, a waxy grass that remains green into the winter, allowing him pasture his cattle until December and reducing his dependence on hay.

Grain-fed beef typically has about 14 percent fat, but meat from one of his grass-fed Piedmontese steers analyzed at a Pittsburgh laboratory had only 2 percent fat, according to Kepple.

"I won't tell you there isn't a taste variance. But its' still very good beef. It's an acquired taste."

Kepple acknowledges there are a couple of disadvantages to intensive grazing. His grass-fed cattle don't grow out as fast as grain-fed cattle. And his feeder calves may be a slightly lighter weight.

"But it's not about how fast I can produce meat. It's how economically I can produce meat," he said.

FORAGE SEEDING IS NOT ROCKET SCIENCE

Dr. Marvin Hall
Penn State Forage Specialist

Good stand establishment is essential to optimizing the production potential of a forage stand. Thin stands encourage weed invasion, reduce yield, and may shorten the life of the stand.

Considering these negative consequences of poor stand establishment along with the high actual and opportunity costs associated with establishing a forage, it is important to minimize the chances of failure.

• Plan ahead. Numerous activities including weed control, adjusting soil pH and fertility, and selecting the best variety need to be completed well in advance of actually seeding a new stand. Remember that "the lack of planning is planning for failure."

• Seeding depth. In my opinioin, the number one reason for poor forage stand establishment is seeding too deep. The agronomic rule-of-thumb is not to plant a seed deeper than five times its diameter. That means that most forages shouldn't be seeded deeper than ¼ inch. Any deeper than ¼ inch increases risks of poor emergence and a weak stand. A tilled seedbed must be firm in order to have accurate seeding depth.

• Seed-to-soil contact. The forage seed must absorb approximately its own weight in water to germinate. From the seed's perspective, that's a lot of water! Since the water must move from the soil into the seed, it is crucial that the seed be in contact with as much soil as possible. Poor seed-to-soil contact results in poor and sporadic germination which lowers the number of productive plants in the stand.

• Seeding rate. Forage seeding rate recommendations vary considerably between species. Reducing seeding rates below the recommended level is not the place to cut corners on forage establishment. Economic analyses show that less than 5 percent of the total cost associated with forage production is seed cost. Therefore, reducing seeding rates is truly being "penny wise and pound foolish."

• Seeding method. While there has been a lot of debate over which seeding method (for example, broadcast, fluid seeding or notill) is the "best," it really isn't a big issue as long as each method is done correctly. This includes not seeding too deep, getting good seed-to-soil contact, and making sure enough seeds are being seeded per acre.

I realize these basic forage establishment principles seem rather routine, but every year there are unnecessary establishment failures. Many of these failures occur because one or more of the basic principles outlined above wasn't followed. This year, don't focus on the details of forage establishment so much that the basic principles are forgotten.

Alfalfa Stubble Application May Boost Yields, Nutrient Values

According to crop adviser Leland Miller of Advanced Agronomics, Quarryville, with the use of the nitrogen material stubble treatment, sometimes "you can get real response, but the quality falls on its face," Miller said. But the nitrogen, in a slow release form, forces the plant to "think" differently, altering its "expression."

Said Miller, "Stubble treatment — that is the key."

The spray-applied material also contains calcium and boron — two essential micronutrients that university crop experts have been saying are necessary to improving yields and nutrient value.

The material pays for itself, noted Reiff, who said that he only needs to get three bales more of alfalfa per acre. But the material can provide him with a big difference in terms of yield. And the response is quicker than is typical of alfalfa without the boost.

With cool, dry weather, in combination with the application, the roots of the plant have to keep reaching down in the ground for more nutrients. For the seven acres of alfalfa on which it was used, it helped that the plants were in their third season, coming after corn in the rotation.

Reiff plants a total of 15 acres at the farm. The soil is tested regularly.

Miller said his philosophy about soil management is to test the alfalfa more frequently than corn, at least every year. Corn can be tested every 3-4 years.

Reiff said that he doesn't put any extra fertilizer on the alfalfa ground, other than liquid manure from his dairy and swine operations. Each alfalfa field goes through about four cuttings a year and lasts about five years.

In the field, last fall cereal grains were no-tilled into the alfalfa for a first cutting. The cereal grains include oats, wheat, barley, and rye. In the second cutting, conducted in late June, mostly alfalfa was harvested.

With the use of the application, yields have increased at least 20 percent, according to Reiff.

This year the second cutting was harvested at a total of 3,300 pounds per acre. Under dry conditions because of a persistent drought, the alfalfa tested 17.2 percent protein, with a total digestible nutrient level of 61.1, relative feed value of 125, at 0.90 phosphorous.

While the amine nitrogen solution contains boron, producers have to be careful — more does not mean better. If you use too much boron, "you'll fry the crop, absolutely," said Miller.

The 9-0-0-7-1.5 solution is applied at two gallons per acre (including 7 percent calcium and 1.5 percent magnesium), with boron added separately, at 1 pint per acre (10 percent). Zinc is also applied at a pint per acre. Spraying is at a pressure of 40 pounds.

Another stubble treatment, of 15-0-0-3, is sometimes recommended by Miller. "Timing is key to this thing," he said, "which affects regrowth very early on." Alfalfa is a big user of potash, which is critical to yield.

Phosphorous levels also affect zinc usage, so it is important to consider proper nutrient balance in the formulations, according to Miller.

This past summer, at least in the early part of the season, growing conditions were good for alfalfa growers, because of the dry, cool weather. A wet year does not do alfalfa well, according to Miller. "You don't have the quality of forage," he said.

With improved alfalfa, Reiff said he has seen good responses in milk production and healthier animals. He found that out when, a few years ago, he lost half of his herd to health problems — mostly stray voltage which he was able to correct. With stray voltage, the animals simply stop drinking the water because they can detect a few volts of electricity. This directly affects milk production.

Reiff farms about 59 tillable acres and has a grade Holstein herd of 50 cows. He also maintains a 60-head farrow-to-finish barn. On the dairy, Reiff uses a TMR. Some of the finished hogs are sold at the New Holland Sales Stables and some are sent to AVA Pork.

Reiff belongs to the National Farmers Organization Dairy Cooperative.

ACCURATE FORAGE MEASUREMENT CAN SAVE GRAZIERS MONEY

MATT SANDERSON
USDA-ARS
Pasture Systems
And Watershed
Management Research
Laboratory

Graziers frequently judge the amount of forage on pasture by "eye."

Experienced graziers often have an accurate "eye" for how much forage may be available for grazing cattle, but inexperienced graziers may not.

Research at the USDA-ARS Pasture Systems and Watershed Management Research Laboratory at University Park demonstrates the value of accurate measurements of available forage in pastures. ARS researchers Matt Sanderson and Alan Rotz used the computer model DAFOSYM (DAiry FOrage SYstem Model) to simulate the economic effects of inaccuracies in estimating forage production on pasture.

A representative grazing dairy farm was developed and the costs and returns from "optimum" management were calculated. Different scenarios were then simulated including under- or over-estimating forage yield on pastures by 10 or 20 percent and underestimating yield by 10 percent in spring and overestimating by 10 percent in summer, and vice versa. All of the scenarios simulated resulted in lower profits compared to the "optimum" farm.

The model predicted that underestimating forage production by 10 or 20 percent resulted in potential economic losses of up to $2,000 per year for a grazing dairy with 110 milkers and 75 young stock on 200 acres of pasture. Overestimating forage production on pasture by 10 or 20 percent resulted in losses of $400 to $800 per year compared with the "optimum farm."

Underestimating pasture production resulted in less hay and silage being produced from extra pasture, more pasture being consumed, and more forage purchased compared to the optimum scenario. The opposite occurred for overestimation of pasture. Although results will vary for different farms, these data indicate that it pays for a dairy grazier to use some method of estimating forage yield (for example, a simple pasture yardstick or a plate meter) and to spend the extra time needed for budgeting forage on pasture.

SPECIAL REPORT

ULTIMATE REPORT CARD

Donald C. Fretts
Washington County
Extension Agent

One of the great frustrations of being an agronomy agent has been the inability of really helping producers get an accurate measurement of crop yields. I believe before one can aspire to greater accomplishment, one must know where they are starting from. The ultimate report card for crop producers is quality yield per acre.

There are different measures of quality crops — net energy, protein, TDN, fiber, etc. — and they all need to be related to per acre yield.

It is important to know that local producers can produce 150 bushels of corn per acre, or six tons of high quality hay per acre, etc. Unfortunately, most producers only can guess as to actual yields and also most producers guess high.

The point I am making is that to adequately measure the return on inputs applied to crop production, some actual yields need to be measured.

Well, after four and one half years of trying, I have actually acquired a set of portable scales that can be used to measure yields of all crops, including forages and grains. I will be using the scales for measuring yields of agronomic plots that are established in the southwest Pennsylvania area cluster, and I would like to work with farmers who want to do some yield measurement of their crops.

All you need to do is call me, with as much advanced notice as possible, and I will do my best to be available to work with you on the actual harvest day.

By actually determining true yield, farmers can do a better job of decision-making relative to crop inputs and field management.

Alfalfa Seeding Rates Under Penn State's Forage Microscope

ANDY ANDREWS
Lancaster Farming Staff

CORNWALL (Lebanon Co.) — Penn State recently took a long, detailed look at different alfalfa seeding rates to determine forage quality and yield.

What they found: there was no difference in forage quality at any seeding rate from 6 pounds to 24 pounds per acre, according to Marvin Hall, Penn State forage specialist.

Forage experts looked at spring-seeded alfalfa with a rate varying from six pounds to 24 pounds in six-pound increments at several sites. One of those sites was at the Glen Krall dairy near Cornwall.

Alfalfa on the test site was seeded in May 1998 at the Krall farm.

What researchers also found: there was no difference in yield over nine pounds of alfalfa seed planted per acre, all the way to the maximum tested, 24 pounds per acre, in a seeding year, Hall noted.

The research has been conducted for about two years. Placing extra seed could be costly with little better return in most cases in and a variety of growing conditions.

However, with sheer high numbers, alfalfa stands could be extended.

But for optimum production of alfalfa, the ideal seeding rate for alfalfa is 15-18 pounds per acre. Seeding from 12-24 pounds, "you'd be hard-pressed to tell much difference" in the quality of the stand, Hall told those who toured the site during the first Silage and Forage Expo late in August.

Hall noted that during this dry year, in some places in the state, alfalfa went into dormancy, storing sugars in the roots. After rains the alfalfa started to recover. Hall noted that recovery for a last, fifth cutting could be possible.

On the Krall farm, he noted the importance of topping the alfalfa and, after sufficient rains allowed it to recover, take a fifth cutting. "If it's out here," said Hall, "you have to get as much as you can."

Hall noted the importance of looking at the quality of the plantings to determine the necessity, in some cases, of reseeding next spring.

To sustain the stand, a minimum of 13-16 seedlings per square foot is necessary. If not at that density, it could be time to reseed.

Ayshire Sale Successful

BELLEVILLE (Mifflin Co.) — The Second Annual "Raised to Graze" Ayrshire Sale was conducted recently at Plum Bottom Dairy Farm near Belleville, Mifflin County.

Alvin String from Harrisonville, New Jersey, purchased the high selling animal for $2,200. Sixty head were sold with the averages as follows: 26 bred heifers averaged $1,150, 25 fresh heifers averaged $1,196, 5 yearling bulls averaged $207, 2 open heifers averaged $500, and 2 August calves averaged $250.

John Rodgers, owner of Plum Bottom, said he's excited about the interest in Ayrshires in terms of grazing.

"A lot of buyers brought Ayrshires to put in their herds of other colors because of the grazing. I realize cattle prices are good, but buyers are also saying yes to Ayrshires and grazing. Our Ayrshires all have pedigrees and can produce. Everyone should consider Ayrshires."

Hesston Forage Harvesters — Model 7155S

The secret to low-cost forage harvesting.

It's no big secret that whole-stalk corn silage produces 40 to 50% more digestible energy over corn harvested as grain.

The big secret is how economically and efficiently you can harvest it with a Hesston® 7155S Forage Harvester.

More cutting power.

Designed for the average-sized livestock producer, this small machine packs a big punch. Its "straight-thru crop-flow" design puts more power into cutting, less into handling the crop. That means greater field efficiency year after year.

The 7155S easily handles tractor PTOs from 90 to 175 hp, and is available with 2-row corn silage header or 6-foot-wide hay pickup.

Electro-hydraulic remote control puts harvesting functions at your fingertips, and the 1,000 rpm drive assures big capacity.

This season, make silage more efficiently and economically – with a new Hesston 7155S.

John Rodgers of Belleville welcomes agricultural specialists from Kazakhstan. The group spent three weeks visiting farms and facilities in Pennsylvania and New York.

Farmer-To-Farmer Group Learns About Intensive Grazing

GAIL STROCK
Mifflin Co. Correspondent

BELLEVILLE (Mifflin Co. ) — "We call him the Ambassador to Kazakhstan," Raisa Glinyonoya said in broken English. "We can speak much about John."

Raisa served as interpreter for seven agriculturalists visiting the United States from the former Soviet republic of Kazakhstan. They came to John Rodgers' Ayrshire farm near Belleville as part of a Farmer-To-Farmer program through Winrock International and Taurus Services.

Their goal was to learn how to produce milk more economically, especially through rotational grazing, as the large dairy farms from the former Soviet Union become privatized.

"I want to show them what grazing has done for me. In my intensive rotational grazing program, I pasture my Ayrshires a full nine months with no stored feed. The paddocks that I don't graze in September and October become food for the herd of heifers in November and December. I think they can adopt this program with modifications."

Historically, livestock production in the former Soviet Union was based on how well production managers achieved production targets set by the state. Feed shortages and poor quality rations kept many dairy complexes underused and milk yields low.

Specialists have noted the low genetic potential of animals and disease problems, especially brucellous and pneumonia.

Since the dissolution of the USSR, some of the large state and collective farms have been seeking ways to increase the productivity of their operations. The visitors sitting around the table with Raisa, on their first trip to the United States, wanted to learn about maximizing profits.

"These are all bosses," Raisa explained. "They find out knowledge of milk production — less expenses, high production, new technologies, new ways of management, technology of A.I. — overall methods if breeding, feeding, and keeping cattle."

Dr. Daulet Chunkunov manages Winrock International, an international institute for agricultural development and the Farmer-To-Farmer Project. He was most interested in genetic development in the United States. Vassily Gorbunov is a livestock specialist for Taurus Service, a sponsor for their trip.

While speaking for the men, Raisa said, "We usually just see pictures of the bulls. Now we saw the bulls and how huge they are. We saw the data about the bulls, the semen and how they freeze and ship it. The quality of American bull semen is high."

Tatayana Kusnetsova, the only woman in the group except for Raisa, and Vladimir Sikovoi, serve as selectioner and veterinarian, respectively, for the Aksai Farm, which houses 2,300 animals, including 1,200 milking cows. Nurken Sherubaer is head of a 750-milking cow farm while Vladimir Akulov manages a 5,000-head herd with 1,400 milking cows in eastern Kazakhstan.

Nurken said through Raisa, "In principle, the feeding ration is the same. We lack the mineral and vitamin ingredients. We agree with the methods we see here. We see the advantages of grazing — no expenses, not so much labor. Kazakhstan is a vast area. The climate conditions are different. We have large farms, big herds, It is difficult to graze as a whole, but it may be adapted in small farms. When we become equipped with knowledge, we will use it."

Raisa explained that, at one time, electricity for fencing had been available. Now, the republics are torn among themselves. Industrial ties are broken. One republic may have the power plant but may not supply electricity to another republic because of nonpayment. She said farmers do have access to forage testing. They raise many of the same crops grown in the United States — corn, oats, barley, soybeans, and grasses.

"We get great lessons here. We are convinced Ayrshire is a breed for grazing. We see free choice in rations and well ventilated barns. It is the law in U.S. to have well ventilated barns — makes cattle healthier and increases level of production. In general, this program was wonderfully thought out. It showed us all aspects of American life and agriculture. The people are friendly and hospitable. Your country is clean — no dogs! Everyone trusts everyone."

Locally, the group visited the New Holland plant and livestock market in Belleville; a total of 15 dairy farms, including Wayne Harpster's Evergeeen Farm in Huntingdon and Dean Daubert's Brown Swiss farm near Lock Haven; Doebler's Seed Company; the Lewistown Rotary; one beef farm; and Don Evans at Penn State. In New York, they visited Niagara Falls, the Buffalo Raceway, three grazing farms with Sonny Golden in Cortland and a 4-H camp. The group concluded its trip by visiting Washington, D.C. during the July 4th weekend.

Pa. Grazing Lands Coalition Schedules Pasture Renovation Program

LEESPORT (Berks Co.) —The Pennsylvania Grazing Lands Forage Conservation Coalition (formerly GLCI) has scheduled a program on pasture renovation Sept. 27 here at the Berks County Ag Center, from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m.

The agenda, as outlined, will be presented by Dr. John Comerford and Dr. Marvin Hall, both of Penn State. Both are well-known agronomists and animal husbandry specialists.

• Session I – agronomic issues

1. Persistence and production after drought damage of forage crops.

2. Fall management and harvesting of drought-damaged crops.

3. Renovation practices for drought-damaged forages.

4. Nitrate issues for harvested forages.

Break

• Session II – animal issues

1. Stretching feed supplies.

2. Using alternative and non-traditional feeds.

3. Heat and drought effects on reproduction.

4. Smart feed purchases.

GLCI is a national endeavor (Grazing Lands Conservation Initiative) sponsored by USDA and basically supervised by NRCS as to programs and funding. All members of the committee must be producers of various farm commodities such as dairy, beef, or sheep. Objectives are to encourage intensive grazing and conservation of farmland in Pennsylvania.

The purpose of this meeting is to provide pasture renovation information to farm producers from the northeast section of Pennsylvania including Berks, Bucks, Lehigh, Montgomery, Schuylkill, Lebanon, Lancaster, Dauphin and Chester counties.

For more information, contact the Berks extension office, (610) 378-1327.

Nutritive Value Of Drought Soybeans As A Forage

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Drought or immature soybean plants can be satisfactorily used as a forage crop. Plants should be allowed to mature as much as possible before harvesting. Some pod or bean development enhances feeding value of plants harvested either as hay or silage. Soybean forage is high in calcium and should be avoided as the major forage source for dry cows.

If the plants are going to be ensiled, it is recommended to do so before the plant moisture drops below 60 to 65 percent. As with any forage crop, it is most critical to have adequate moisture levels in the crop at ensiling to achieve a proper fermentation. This may require chopping some and checking dry matter content with a microwave oven or Koster Tester.

If plants are high in moisture and lack pod or bean development, and if it is possible, add 100 to 200 pounds of a ground grain per ton when direct-cutting rather than wilting to 60 to 65 percent moisture. The ground corn or other grains will add carbohydrates to the crop to help with fermentation. The cow will then use the energy from the grains when the crop is fed.

The stems of soybean plants are not very palatable and animals will sort them out if given the opportunity. It is best to feed soybean silage in a TMR system. Silage may have to be chopped finer to minimize sorting of the stems even if used in a TMR. If using the Penn State Forage Particle Separator, recommended ranges should be no more than 10-15 percent greater than .75 inch and 30-40 percent in the .75 to .31 inch range.

Another possibility is to make soybean hay. If soybean hay is made, it is best to use this hay in a total mixed ration to help prevent sorting. Soybean hay can be unpalatable under many circumstances. This can be more difficult to work with as leaf shatter may cause great losses of protein, calcium, and energy during haymaking. It may be difficult to dry down pods for hay if beans are too well developed.

It is critical as with any forage to analyze soybean silage or hay for their nutrient content. These can vary greatly depending on the circumstances involved. The maturity of the soybean plants at harvest will greatly effect their nutritive content.

Fat content should be analyzed if the crop had any pods or beans present at harvest. If soybean forage contains substantial amounts of developed beans, you may have to reduce the amount of other fats and oils in the ration for lactating cows. In addition, fiber level may vary greatly, and these items will both have major impacts on rumen utilization and milk fat production. The expected nutrient content of soybean forage is listed in Table 1.

| Stage of maturity | CP % | ADF % | NDF % | $NE_L$ Meal/lb. | Ca % | P % | Mg % | Fat % |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Average silage | 17.3 | 40.0 | 48.2 | 0.56 | 1.36 | .47 | .34 | 5.1 |

Tips For A Safe Haymaking Season

Nick Place
Susquehanna County Extension

MONTROSE (Susquehanna Co.) — Here are some haymaking tips.

• Know you operator's manuals. These manuals contain vital information for the safe and efficient operation of each piece of machinery. Every potential operator should familiarize themselves with the manuals.

• Have a form of communication to others. It is a good idea to have a cellular phone or CB radio handy. Regular "check-in" times shoudl be established.

• Inspect PTO shafts. PTO shaft injury incidents are among the more deadly and disfiguring hazards on the farm. Make sure all shields are intact and in place. Avoid wearing loose-fitting clothing while working around PTO powered equipment.

• Turn off the engine and take the keys with you before clearing or repairing equipment. A large percentage of injuries occur to people who try to fix or clear equipment "on the run." Shortcuts like this may save a few moments at the time, but the pain of an injury and time lost while healing make taking risks like this unacceptable.

• Load and haul bales correctly. Always use bale clamps or forks when loading round bales with a front-end loader. They will prevent the bale from rolling back onto the operator.

• Inspect mirrors, lights and SMV emblems. Because hay operations often travel on roadways, make sure you can see and be seen with mirrors, lights and SMV emblems.

• Equip tractors with rollover protection structures. Wearing seat belts and installing a ROPS will provide the greatest protection to the operator in case of a tractor rollover, and may provide protection from large, round bales rolling back on the operator.

• Know your endurance limit. Incidents and injuries often occur to people who are physically and mentally "worn-out." When you become tired or drowsy in the field, your mental alertness is comprised, and you may skip safety procedures to save time.

PFGC ❖ SPECIAL REPORT ❖

EARLY HARVEST IS ESSENTIAL IN MAKING DAIRY-QUALITY GRASS HAY

The use of perennial grasses for high-quality dairy feed throughout much of Pennsylvania is common.

Unfortunately, the quality of the harvested forage is generally less than dairy-quality.

The key factor in harvesting dairy-quality forage is harvest management.

Recent research conducted by Dr. Jerry Cherney at Cornell University showed that plant development varies with grass species, but forage quality decline was consistent across all species. In other words, the forage species is not as important as timely harvest in obtaining high quality forage.

Reed canarygrass, bromegrass, tall fescue, and timothy were harvested at various stages of development and tested for quality. According to Dr. Cherney, the research showed that fiber digestion and other quality parameters decline with increased maturity. The magnitude and rate of quality decline with maturity are much more important than quality differences between individual species. Cherney also suggested that producers should consider harvesting their pure grass stands in the spring for dairy feed before they harvest alfalfa, in order to produce acceptable grass quality.

In other research, presented at the recent American Society of Agronomy meetings, results indicate that spring harvest of later maturing varieties of cool-season grass species are lower in quality than early maturing varieties. When an early and late maturing variety of orchardgrass were harvested at the same stage of maturity, the early maturing variety had greater quality than the late maturing variety.

The research suggested that the lower quality was the result of higher temperatures during the growth of the late maturing variety relative to the temperatures in which the earlier maturing variety grew. However, the difference in quality between late and earlier maturing grasses was minor compared to the drop in quality associated with delaying the first harvest of either variety.

In summary, the use of cool-season grasses for dairy-quality feed requires harvesting the grasses earlier than normal. Delay in grass harvest and not grass species is the major factor in producing low quality grass hay or silage. Consider harvesting grasses before you would normally harvest alfalfa to obtain high quality forage that is suitable for dairy animals.

Drought 'Survival' Year Challenges Met By Producers

ANDY ANDREWS
Lancaster Farming Staff

ROCKSPRING (Centre Co.) — "This is a survival year," sheep producer Mike Bazley, Derry, told about 40 visitors to Ag Progress Days in August here.

A statewide drought emergency was the culminating experience for herd managers who saw the drought's beginnings early.

Fortunately for some, practices to grow good drought-tolerant drops, manage stored feeds, and prepare for the winter were in place.

Beef producer Woody Zook, who manages a small registered Angus herd 45 miles outside of Philadelphia, saw the drought starting in May. "It went downhill since then," he said.

Already in May the only thing green on the farm was switchgrass Zook planted, including three different varieties. Zook wasn't familiar with the techniques of managing the grass, so it took him some time to realize that the roots have to be established (to about two feet deep) before the tops start to green and flourish. The waiting process required about two months with no visible growth at all.

The grass provides beef farmers a lot of potential, noted Zook. But he realizes the grass doesn't really provide enough energy and protein for dairy animals.

"But the beef cattle love switchgrass hay," he said. He fed the brood cows the grass from round bales. "It was like feeding candy to a baby."

Zook learned that growers can expect the grass to last an excess of 20 years, he said. The grass is planted on six acres. It required a lot of herbicide and pesticide management to allow it to flourish.

Zook maintains a cow-calf herd of 30 cows and 30 calves. He has one herd bull.

With the effects of the drought, Zook was still forced to supplement feed during the summer.

In 1998, Zook also faced a drought, not as severe as 1999. He maintains about 32 acres in permanent pasture.

Zook noted that he frost-seeded in January 1994, when there were about 18 inches of layered ice and snow on his pasture. "It was solid ice," he said. But the frost seeding of clover worked, and in the spring it "came up extremely well," he told those visiting Ag Progress Days.

Zook finishes the cattle as a part-time business. He feeds them 1,000 pounds of hay per day to brood cows at a cost of $50 per day. He told producers "you have to be flexible" in maintaining a grass-based system. Zook uses polywire and step-in posts.

"Match the needs of the cattle with the growth patterns of the grasses," he said.

Larry Lohr, Hooversville, Somerset County, cares for about 110 cows and 24 acres of pasture. All the animals are on supplement, including a TMR with grasses.

The grass mix includes 60 percent legumes (white clover) and 40 percent grasses, including reed canarygrass, ryegrass, orchardgrass, bromegrass, and timothy.

In a drought year, Lohr discovered that grass mixes he planted 15 years ago, when he started the dairy grazing operation, lasted longer before they started to brown up, and recovered a lot faster. Grasses planted three years ago, during the drought, burned up quickly and took a while to regenerate.

The new grasses don't produce near the amount of forage compared to grasses on old soils, Lohr noted.

Lohr uses a three-wire high-tensile perimeter fence. He can adjust the paddocks any way he needs to.

Lohr doesn't use manure on the pastures at all.

Cattle are allowed to graze when the grass measures eight inches all. They graze until the grass measures 3-4 inches tall.

Per cow, Lohr said he saves $150 on feed costs. With 110 cows, that adds up to significant savings, according to the dairyman.

Mike Bazley, Derry sheep farmer, cares for 75 ewes and 90 lambs.

For producers to allow livestock to graze, they must first brush up on their knowledge of grazing. "Learn to raise grasses well," Bazley said.

• When he started the grass-based lamb operation, the hay fields were in heavy need of lime to adjust the pH. Bazley said the soil test recommendation was for 16 tons of lime to the acre — "it was that rough," he said.

Bazley continues to lime a lot. "If

How To Find More Water

Robert Graves
Penn State
Ag Bio & Engineering

As wells, springs and streams go down, the value of water on your farm goes up!

You can't manufacture water, but you can make good use of what you have.

Think about creative and mundane ways that you can reduce, reuse, or recycle water on your farmstead.

Leaks wast water. Take an inventory of and fix leaking faucets, hoses and automatic washing equipment, overflowing water bowls and troughs, and toilets that don't shut off. Too often we "don't even see" dripping faucets and overflowing waterers! You might even want to ask a neighbor or advisor to sleuth out leaks.

Put a five-gallon pail under a dripping hose and time how long it takes to fill up. Filling a five-gallon pail once an hour takes enough water to satisfy the daily needs of three cows.

Check the settings on your automatic washing equipment. Are you using more water than necessary? This not only wastes water but may result in either excessive chemical use or diluting chemical strength.

Reuse all the water that goes through your milk pre-cooler. If you are just running it into a tub that overflows on the ground when cows aren't drinking, you are wasting precious water. Pipeline wash water can be collected and reused for floor washing. Let the first rinse that contains milk fats go down the drain to prevent storage and handling systems from becoming slimy or smelly.

Scrape manure from parlor floors before washing to reduce water needs. High pressure or high volume booster pumps may allow less water to be used during clean-up. Do not flush tanks indiscriminately. Cow Cooling — it's not necessary to wet cows continuously. Once cows are wet, turn off the water and let them "damp dry." When they are damp to touch, turn the water back on long enough to wet their hides again. Buy or assemble a control panel that will cycle the unit on and off and a thermostat to turn the water off completely at lower temperatures. Also be sure barns are wide open for natural ventilation and that you have good air flow over the cows.

Extra storage can help if you run out of water at peak demand times but have extra water at other times. A qualified plumber, well driller or water supply expert can help you determine if this will help in your situation.

Reduce animal demand by moving non-milking animals to facilities that have a different water supply.

Priortize water uses. Use the best water for human drinking and sanitizing milking equipment, then water cows, and finally for floor washing, etc. Plan for how you will increase the quantity and dependability of your water supply before next year.

Drought 'Survival' Year Challenges Met By Producers

you have money, it's a good investment to keep fields limed," said Bazley.

With the help of the county conservation district and others, intensive grazing was established. He uses four 1.5-acre paddocks. Bazley also uses some larger paddocks measuring 4-5 acres each, with about 30 lambs on them.

For the smaller paddocks, the amount of lambs varies with the amount of grass on them, their condition, the age of the lambs, and other factors.

A challenge to Bazley is keeping lambs in with electric fence. He had to come up with some unique ways, including hooking a touch wire-device on their backs, to ensure they wouldn't cross over to other paddocks. Where there is higher, more lush grass, the lambs will travel.

For the most part, the fencing works to keep the sheep in. "All but a few renegade lambs," he said.

As for managing the pastures in a drought, Bazley uses a "glorified stockyard," he said, a sacrifice lot, to allow the sheep to graze. He also uses a pond pasture summer field, locked in around a farm pond. The pond is spring-fed from the farm.

Before allowing the sheep to graze, Bazley waits until the grass measures 5-7 inches high. He uses a ruler to gauge the length of grass. He allows the lambs to graze until the grass measures 4 inches high.

Producers must examine their animals in the field to determine body condition. That ensures the proper amounts of feed are being utilized.

Bazley hasn't had to rely on winter supplies because of the drought emergency.

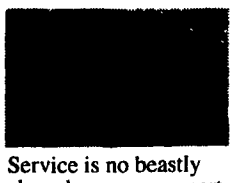
The sheep producer warned those who are interested in raising sheep or other animals to be aware of bloat. Sheep eating wet pastures with legumes can bloat. "Watch the legume-grass ratio," he said.

Bazley urges those who have an interest in reclaiming property, raising sheep on rough ground could work.

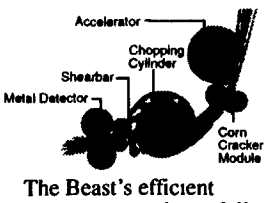
"I protect the grass," Bazley said. "Keep that in mind and everything will fall into place."

The corn cracker can be changed in just 5 minutes to switch from corn to hay. The Jaguar's efficient processing produces quality silage for higher milk production.

The operator can safely sharpen the chopping knives and precisely adjust the shearbar from the driver's seat automatically.



Service is no beastly chore because compartment covers quickly swing open to provide easy access to the engine and cooling system.



The Beast's efficient cutting system has a full width metal detector, 30" wide chevron cutting drum and full width 8-blade accelerator.

MANAGING ALFALFA DURING AND FOLLOWING A DROUGHT

MARVIN HALL
Penn State
Forage Specialist

Alfalfa in some areas of Pennsylvania is experiencing water stress and the question of alfalfa management during this time is being raised. But before we discuss the management of water-stressed alfalfa, lets look at how alfalfa responds to drought conditions.

Alfalfa is commonly referred to as a drought-tolerant plant. During the onset of drought conditions, alfalfa will stop using carbohydrates for stem and leaf production and store those carbohydrates in the roots. This provides high levels of root carbohydrates for long term survival if drought conditions persist and the leaves become photosynthetically inactive.

However, alfalfa's ability to survive a drought does not mean that alfalfa will not show drought-related symptoms. Water-stressed alfalfa will experience decreased stem elongation and in some cases mature more rapidly. Leaf production is less effected by water stress than stem elongation. This results in higher forage quality of water-stressed plants than their unstressed counterparts.

To Harvest Or Not To Harvest?

The primary criterion influencing the decision to harvest drought-stressed alfalfa should be based on the cost of harvesting and the value of the forage. The alfalfa plants may look weak and severely stressed during a drought; however, harvesting at the stage of plant development when you would normally harvest is recommended as long as adequate alfalfa is present to justify the cost of harvesting. The plant, even though it may be very short, will already have stored more than enough root carbohydrates to insure survival if the drought persists or insure regrowth if sufficient rains remove the drought conditions.

Silage Spreaders with a Heritage of Quality

Lancaster Level-Flo has been the leader in non-motorized silage spreaders for more than 25 years. Each spreader is specifically designed to meet the needs of the individual operator.

Choose the spreader that best matches the equipment you use to fill your silo.

The Model 1030 Multi-Flo® is our standard silage spreader. With a 9" gooseneck, it is designed for average capacity blowers and silo sizes.

The Model 1200 Multi-Flo® has a 12" wide gooseneck. Its larger size all but eliminates plugging problems, even when you blow in haylage. It is especially helpful in larger silos.

The BlueMax® is built for those who push high-capacity silo filling equipment to the limit. All parts of the BlueMax® subject to wear are made 25% heavier - and the stainless steel plate is twice as heavy For strength, there are reinforcements all around. Even our well-known non-binding hinge is heavier.

Supplement Forage With Winter Small Grains During Drought

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Because drought conditions across most of Pennsylvania have resulted in lower quantities of forage and grains, many livestock producers may need additional forage for fall and spring.

One possible source is winter small grains, said an expert in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences.

"Winter grains can be grazed in the fall and early spring without greatly affecting grain yield if they go into the winter with approximately two to three inches of growth," said Elwood Hatley, professor of agronomy. "You also should remove cattle in the spring prior to growth stage 6 or stem elongation."

When used for pasture, Hatley suggested planting winter small grains in mid-August to early September for grazing from October to late December and again in early spring. "If you're harvesting the small grain for silage, grazing should be discontinued prior to growth stage 6 in the spring," he said.

"For fall and spring silage production, we suggest a mixture of spring oat and a winter grain since it's difficult to harvest a winter grain for silage prior to growth stage 6," he said. "Spring oat also can be seeded in mid-August for fall grazing or silage production.

"All winter grain species can be harvested for forage," he said. "Winter rye traditionally has been the major small grain used for forage because it has the most winter hardiness and can be planted the latest for both erosion control and forage. But because its quality drops faster than the other small rains, you should harvest it prior to head emergence (boot stage)."

Other small grains can be harvested later, Hatley said. But most are harvested near head emergence to allow earlier planting of corn or sorghum for silage. "In most years, rye is ready in late April, barley in early May and wheat and triticale in early to mid-May," he said. "Seeding other winter grains with rye (rye-wheat, rye-triticale) has helped maintain quality when rye harvest is delayed past head emergence."

Spring oat and spring barley also can be used for forage, Hatley said. "Seed early, in mid- to late March," he said. "Mixtures of spring grains and peas are available and also should be seeded early. Harvest at head emergence (growth stage 10) in early June. Grain or forage crops can be seeded after harvest."

When planting small grains for forage, Hatley suggests increasing the seeding rate 30 percent. "If grazing in the fall, apply 40 to 50 pounds nitrogen per acre at planting to stimulate late summer and early fall growth. Follow the recommendations in Penn State's Agronomy Guide for phosphorus and potassium applications. Don't delay applying spring nitrogen. Apply the required amount at green-up in early spring. Early applied nitrogen can stimulate additional tillering that may contribute to dry matter production but not to grain production."

The Agronomy Guide can be found in the World Wide Web at http://AgGuide.agronomy.psu.edu/. A printed copy is available for $9 from the College of Agricultural Sciences Publications Distribution Center, (814) 865-6713.

DOES NUMBER OF PLANT SPECIES IN A PASTURE MATTER?

Biodiversity is alive and well on intensively grazed pastures in the Northeast, according to research reported by scientists at the USDA-ARS Pasture Systems and Watershed Management Research Lab in University Park.

Ben Tracy, a plant ecologist, and Matt Sanderson, a research agronomist, surveyed the plant diversity of 73 pastures in seven northeast states over the 1997 and 1998 summers. The researchers found that pastures were more diverse than expected, averaging 32 plant species per pasture.

Several weed species were found, but the weeds were a small proportion of the pasture area. A typical pasture had seven different grass species and four different legume species. The researchers suggest that this forage diversity is in the range that will benefit farmers both ecologically and economically.

Diversity refers to the number of different plant species in a particular area. Farmers might benefit from having a high diversity of forage plants (for example, grasses and legumes) in their pastures. A diverse pasture may reduce the spread of pests, improve forage yields over the growing season, and increase pasture resistance to distrubances like drought. For example, maintaining species in pasture that are most productive during the "summer slump" helps to even out late season forage yields.

However, before researchers make any recommendations on how to manage pastures for diversity, they must first learn how diverse these Northeast pastures really are. Maybe most pastures in the Northeast are sufficiently diverse that they warrant no additional manipulations? With this general objective in mind, Tracy and Sanderson set out in 1997 and 1998 to survey the diversity of plants across various farms in the Northeast. In these surveys, they measured two things: 1: the diversity of plants that exist in soil seed bank because these plants are important in filling gaps often created in pastures and 2) the diversity of aboveground vegetation.

In the seed bank study, the researchers found that most of the existing seed in pasture soils was from bluegrass and white clover. The seed bank of these species plays an important role in pasture management by germinating in and filling bare spots or "gaps" in pastures.

The total number of plant species aboveground in pastures ranged from 16 to 49 (average of 32). On most pastures, bluegrass, white clover, dandelion, and broadleaf plantain accounted for majority of plant cover. Overall, pastures were more diverse than researchers anticipated and they suggested that the diversity of most northeast pastures is in the range that will benefit farmers both ecologically and economically. A trade-off exists between benefits of having a diverse pasture and the cost of managing highly diverse, complex mixture. Future research by the scientists will address the productivity, economics, and management of plant diversity in pastures.

PASTURE PONDERINGS

DUANE E. PYSHER
Grassland Management Specialist
Natural Resources Conservation Service

It is good to be back at my desk after being at Ag Progress Days for the week. Even though it is a long four days, the ability to meet many of you and discuss grazing is always a highlight and significant part of the show.

As part of the Conservation Education Area, we have an operating display of many different types of pasture watering systems devices. This display gets bigger and better each year. If you missed us this year be sure to look us up next year.

We also hold a grazing forum where we have a dairy, a beef, and a sheep grazier on a panel where the audience can come and ask the producer questions about their respective operations.

It is interesting to note the questions that are on the minds of the audience during the forums. As one might guess, this year the majority of the questions dealt with the drought and what the producer panel members were doing to provide some grazing this fall.

There were several things that different members were doing. One dairy farmer was seeding additional acre of annual ryegrass. He has seven acres of annual ryegrass and finds it to overwinter – it has survived for three years. He gets several grazings in the spring and fall from it. Another producer was planning to seed some spring oats to provide fall grazing. It germinates easily and grows rapidly in the fall. However, the first hard frost will kill it and it will not provide any spring grazing. We also discussed the use of fall seeded small grains, in particular rye, for fall and spring grazing.

Several were planning on grazing some hay fields they were not going to be able to mechanically harvest. However, with some of the recent rains many areas have been experiencing, this may allow those hay fields to regrow and produce another cutting this fall. We also discussed warm season grasses and one producer with a cow-calf herd planted some this year and hopes to graze them next vear. Warm season grasses on the dairy farm have limited application because of their low nutritional value for the lactating cow.

When a drought does hit and our hay crops become too tin or short to mechanically harvest, however, a grazier has the ability to turn livestock into those fields and make use of that otherwise lost or wasted forage. Having a fencing system in place on the perimeter of the farm and some sort of portable fencing material allows us to be able to get our livestock to where that forage is. The key here is to afford flexibility in our grazing systems. We can put flexibility in our systems with the watering and fencing systems as well as in our management. Fencing is perhaps the number one way in which we can put the most flexibility in our grazing programs.

When we think about fencing, we are faced with what type of fencing to use, how many wires, what should the spacing of those wires be, what types of post or wire to use, and so on. We need to consider all of these and perhaps several other factors when we are designing our fence systems. We also need to consider the classes and types of livestock we are containing and controlling with the fence. Yes, I used and meant the word "control" because it is fencing that controls our grazing livestock and adds the control to our grazing system. Without fence there would be no rotational grazing unless the livestock were tethered in some way. It is the fence that makes managed grazing possible. Fencing is a control to keep undesirable animals, such as coyotes or dogs, out of pastures as well keeping the livestock in.

Recently I was involved with a hands-on training for NRCS agency personnel on fencing building. It was great to become reacquainted with some of the basics of fence building – learning how to properly build a brace and knowing which way to install the brace wire to give the corner or gate post the needed strength and support.... the correct way to staple the insulators to the posts, proper, and save driving techniques of the posts. There have not been any radically new fencing methods but there are constant changes in fencing materials and building techniques, and a session such as the one I just attended helps to bring you up to speed on the changes. If you have never built any fence but are planning to, I suggest that if you can attend such a class or spend a day with an experienced fence builder, by all means plan to do that. It is time that will be well spent.

Sustaining Northeast Dairy Farms A Big Task

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Across the Northeast, farmers such as Mark and Sarah Russell of Sudbury, Vt. are benefiting from Sustainable Agriculture and Research Education (SARE) funded research and outreach about management-intensive grazing.

"The dilemma today is that we have an aging generation of farmers who are backed into a corner," said Mark Russell, who has been a grazier for six years and interested in grazing long before that. "There are a lot of questions and no answers, no solutions. But I think grazing answers some questions and offers some solutions — it offers a way out rather than just quitting. And it doesn't require big capital expenditures or industrial-type management."

Ten years ago, Dr. William Murphy, a University of Vermont agronomist, received one of the first SARE grants to study management-intensive grazing. Since then, work continued by Murphy, other researchers and farmers themselves has demonstrated that pasture-based farming can lower production costs, improve profits, and offer farmers hope for a future in agriculture.

Northeast SARE projects on dairy and grazing systems extend throughout the region, literally from Maine to West Virginia. The information here emphasizes Vermont projects as a way of showing how SARE is affecting the agricultural landscape in a particular state.

But the changes in Vermont are also occurring throughout the region. A SARE-supported professional development project project brought extension, NRCS and other agricultural professionals to Vermont for intensive training in management intensive grazing. Now they — and others — are adapting grazing systems to their conditions.

"Although the early work has begun in Vermont, we can now see a region-wide impact," said Northeast SARE Coordinator Fred Magdoff.

Grass-based farming has environmental benefits as well. Keeping land in pasture rather than cultivating it for row crops such as corn reduces erosion and pesticide use. As government regulations put more pressure on the livestock industry to lessen nutrient overload from manure, pasture-based farming offers an excellent alternative to confinement operations that can exacerbate runoff pollution.

"Regardless of the size of the operation, grazing addresses the manure issue in a positive way," Russelll said. "As soon as your turn those cows out onto grass, they start saving you money in manure management."

And in rugged areas such as northern New England, hill farms ill-suited to cultivation and abandoned could be brought back into livestock production through intensive grazing, a productive use of steep, easily eroded terrain.

"There are 14 million acres of pasture land in the Northeast and most is poorly managed. The potential for profitably livestock production on that land is enormous," Murphy said.

Farmers are also finding that management-intensive grazing has improved the quality of their lives by easing financial pressures and the crushing workload of confinement dairy farming. It's given young farmers hope for a real future on the land, and older farmers hope that they can pass on their farms and their heritage to the next generation.

"Grazing management saved this farm," said 24-year-old Travis Forgues. Forgues and his wife, Amy, recently returned to help his parents run their dairy farm in Alburg Springs, Vt., after Henry and Sally Forgues had turned around the financial decline of the farm they had operated for 20 years — with grazing.

"Grazing has been the real focal point of our farm's profitability and cohesiveness — being able to sustain two families, as well as look to the future, which a lot of farms can't do right now," Travis Forgues said.

In the early 1980s, Murphy, who also grazes cattle on his farm, was one of the few people in the U.S. practicing intensive pasture management. First advocated by French agronomist Andre Voisin in the late 1950s, the practice rations out pasture forage according to the needs of livestock while protection vegetations from over- and undergrazing and utilizing most of the forage produced. Large pastures are divided into smaller areas called paddocks and grazed by a high concentration or stocking density of animals. When they have grazed the paddock down to a certain height, animals are quickly moved to a fresh paddock to prevent overgrazing.

Now, an estimated 200 livestock producers in Vermont use management-intensive grazing, and other farmers in the Northeast are following suit.

Grazing has helped dairy farmers making the transition from conventional to organic production. In Vermont, the number of organic dairies has jumped from just three to 40 over the last five years. These farmers in particular rely on pasture forage because organically grown grain is so expensive and scarce, and because of grazing's environmental benefits.

"Organic farmers know that forage is as important as grain, which is an alternative way of looking at feeding dairy cattle," said Enid Wonnacott, director of the Northeast Organic Farming Association of Vermont. "High-quality forage leads to healthy cows. They make milk off forage, not grain, so pasture management and forage quality are very important factors."

For many farmers, it's the economics of grazing that have really impressed them. While the price of milk to farms has changed little in the last two decades, the cost of inputs such as machinery, fertilizers, land and labor has risen inexorably. That has squeezed farmers to such an extent that the number of dairy farms in Vermont has declined from 3,382 in 1978 to 1,815 in 1998.

"With prices fixed by a federal pricing system, dairy producers must look to reducing expenses to improve their bottom lines," said Roger Clapp, deputy commissioner of agriculture for Vermont. "Grazing is one of the areas that has shown the most promise in recent years in meeting this goal."

Early SARE-funded research by Murphy on "Improving Farm Profitability by Efficiently Using the Pasture Resource" found annual savings in total feed costs of $14,500 and $12,850 on two dairy farms he

Pasture Ponderings

Why spend all that time to build a fencing system to find out that you made many errors or constructed your braces wrong? Even if you attend a class, there are no guarantees that you still will not make mistakes, but you can perhaps minimize them. By doing it yourself, you will also be saving yourself the installation costs of putting up the fence.

There are also several good books available on the subject of planning and building fences. If you attend some of the pasture walks or grazing field days, you can meet other graziers or even fencing contractors who can discuss your fencing needs and learn from them.

If you need additional information on fencing, give me a call (717) 237-2221 or write to me at NRCS, One Credit Union Place, Suite 340 Harrisburg, PA 17110-2993.

Until next time, happy grazing.

Sustaining Northeast Dairy Farms A Big Task

studied intensively. He projected that a Vermont dairy farm could save between 30 and 48 percent in feed costs each year by relying on pasture forage.

Murphy's research also established that management-intensive grazing can convert pastures from poor vegetation into a highly nutritious mixture of grasses and legumes that can sustain large numbers of livestock with little supplementation by expensive grain. Other portions of his project studied the use of supplemental concentrates in grazing cows' diets. Murphy found that feeding cows more grain doesn't necessarily mean more milk production or more profit and, in fact, that feeding grain may cost more than is returned in added milk production.

On better-managed pastures, cows will increase their dry matter intake by as much as 25 percent, his research found. And if cows increase the dry matter they consume to 3 percent of their body weight — about one percent more than conventional recommendations — farmers could save $180 a year on feed for each cow because the animal would eat about $1 less per day in concentrate during the grazing season.

Later, the University of Vermont Pasture Management Outreach Program, which Murphy directed, made an extensive study of Vermont dairy farms using management-intensive grazing.

The two-year economic analysis by Jon Winsten, Sarah Flack, Lisa McCrory and Joshua Silman showed that among nearly two dozen grass-based farms the average net cash income per cow in 1994 was $600, compared to $451 per cow for the top 25 Vermont dairy herds using Agrifax, Farm Credit's accounting system, and $145 for the average Vermont dairy farm.

Milk production per cow was lower for the pasture-based farms, but their production costs were also lower.

Winsten and Brian Petrucci also did another economic study comparing various dairy farms: an "average" Vermont dairy farm based on Farm Credit statistics; a farm using management-intensive grazing; one using management-intensive grazing with a spring-calving, seasonal herd; a pastured-based, seasonal herd with low-investment expansion; and a third, pastured-based farm with moderate investment expansion. A final scenario was a confinement operation feeding machine-harvested grass forage.

This study shows returns to farm assets that ranged from a minus 5.3 percent for the average farm, to plus 7.8 percent rate of return for the intensively grazed farm that expanded with moderate investment. The grazing farm made a profit of $434 per cow each year, while the average farm made just $8 per cow, and an all-confinement operation earned $200 per cow.

One of the biggest benefits of grazing has been its ability to bring farmers together to share ideas and exchange information. "By networking, each farmer becomes an agent of change through a ripple effect that results around each farm," Murphy said.

Many Vermont graziers are members of the two-year-old Vermont Grass Farmers Association, started by farmers, private consultants and Extension staff with a keen interest in grazing—it now has 300 members.

The Pasture management Outreach Program, funded by SARE and the Kellogg Foundation, continued for several years to provide technical assistance to individual farmers, facilitate grazier discussion groups and conduct pasture walks to show how grazing works in real-life situations. Murphy developed a Grazier Support Network in which farmers, university researchers, Extension and federal farm agency staff participated in the pasture walks and discussion groups that continue to meet through the year. The network includes beef, poultry, goat and sheep producers as well as dairy farmers. Farmers have the chance to ask questions, pass along what they have learned and encourage each other.

Staff from other institutions and agencies such as the Natural Resources Conservation Service and land-grant universities responded to farmers' requests for more information by doing research and helping to organize pasture walks. In states like New Hampshire and Maine, where the number of intensive-grazing operations has also grown, discussion groups and up and running, introducing farmers to new grazing ideas. Another SARE project supported Extension agents and farmers from Vermont and New Hampshire who visited New Zealand, where intensive grazing has long been the backbone of successful, low-cost livestock production. More than half of New Zealand farmers meet regularly in management discussion groups. The U.S. visitors studied and learned how to better facilitate such groups, then returned to apply what they learned.

In Pennsylvania, where nearly a third of dairy farmers rely on pasture as their main source of forage and many more are planning to intensively graze, a SARE-funded project is gearing up to host regional workshops to instruct extension staff, veterinarians, agricultural lenders and other agri-businesses in grazing management.

Other SARE-supported projects are educating agricultural professionals and farmers throughout New England, and in Delaware and Maryland about grazing.

A half-dozen conferences have been held in northern New England since Murphy's research began. They draw farmers and agency staff from around the region to learn more about grazing and to talk to national experts. Several videos on grazing have been developed, as well as newsletters and publications.

Dairy farmers aren't the only Northeast producers turing to pasture-based farming. One SARE-funded project is looking at the viability of raising sheep on pasture, investigating production practices, management systems and markets for pasture-raised lamb. The number of sheep in Northern New England, the center of U.S. production more than a century ago, declined precipitously as hill farms declined and Western competition increased. But grazing could turn those steep, cold farms back into pastures that finish top-quality lambs. The New England Culinary Institute is one of the participants in the project, taste-testing pasture-fed lamb during some of its classes.

Other SARE-funded projects in the region are investigating such production issues as endophyte levels in fescue grass, and parasites of grazing livestock.

"Now that we know how to manage pastures, the challenge is to encourage more farmers to try it," Murphy said. High input confine-

At Dickinson Cattle Co., Inc. of Barnesville, Ohio, Texas Longhorns improve pasture quality and carrying capacity by consuming low quality brush and Locust tree bark. The browse ability of the Longhorns create an extra profit factor.

James Forshey, resource conservationist of Belmont and Monroe counties, Ohio, identifies tree bark eaten from large Locust trees and other scrub brush. Texas Longhorns at Dickinson Cattle Company are consuming various browse, which allows lush high protein grasses to return. Joel Dickinson on the right.

From Tree Bark To Lean Beef

BARNESVILLE, Ohio — A new way to increase cattle profitability has been documented at Dickinson Cattle Company, Inc., in Belmont County, southeastern Ohio.

The Ohio River Valley has been famous for great cattle grazing and lush grasses, but ranchers are plagued by scrub brush, briars, thornbushes, and low-growing aggressive browse. The more than 40-inch rainfall makes a good environment for lox-quality unpalatable browse.

NRCS Resource Conservationist James Forshey of Belmont and Monroe counties recently inspected the complete removal of bark from numerous species. He said, "The appearance of the thickets was very striking because the bark was chewed off from ground level to six and seven feet up the trees. If the bark is removed that deep, the plant dies. It is not going to be a brushy pasture, it will go back to grass."

The brush bark consumption was created by a young herd of Texas Longhorn females introduced to a new pasture. For this breed, they have been well known for hundreds of years as "cactus eaters" in the Southwest. In Ohio they are consuming bark from scrub brush, Locust, Autumn Olive, Sumac and Multiflora Rose.

Although Texas Longhorns may not grow as rapid as some breeds, their economical "browse utilization" is obviously a profit consideration. The Doherty Ranch of southeastern Kansas documented a carrying capacity of four Longhorn cows where their other breeds only could maintain three head on the same amount of land. This was found because of Longhorns utilizing more browse, which the other breeds considered unpalatable.

DCCI maintains one of the largest Longhorn herds in North America with a total herd number of just under 1,400.

Darol Dickinson, general manager of DCCI, said, "We have found a renewed interest in Longhorn herd sires has developed as the browse utilization economics is considered. Many ranchers in foreign countries are purchasing semen from us because their grazing areas are even much worse."

As researchers project long-term reductions in world grain available for livestock consumption, the breeds of cattle flexible in high browse utilization will obviously become more popular. The Longhorn breed, once referred to as "the scavengers of the desert," may soon become known as "the scavengers of the brush country."

Sustaining Northeast Dairy Farms

ment farming makes no sense in the Northeast, Murphy says, where climate and soils are ideal for growing temperate grasses and legumes but many soils are less than ideal annual tilled crops such as corn. More pasture-based farms could reinvigorate the landscape and culture of rural America, he believes.

"Farms currently in business would be able to stay in business; new people would come into farming so more people would be living on the land," he said. "And that would result in small, rural communities being revitalized."

Grazing Program

FREEPORT (Armstrong Co.) — J.B. Harold, Somerset, Project Grass coordinator, will be hired full time as an NRCS employee to save the 19-year-old grazing program.

Project Grass is a cooperative effort by local farmers and county conservation districts, with assistance from the USDA agencies to improve agricultural through better utilization of grassland productivity in 18 Western Pennsylvania counties.

Project Grass was formed in 1980, with Tom Calvert, Somerset, as Project Grass's first grazing coordinator.

In 1995 Tom Calvert retired, and with that, NRCS retired Project Grass. The Project Grass coordinating committee attained a 319 grant, and then was able to hire a new coordinator, J.B. Harold, and also give some cost share for grazing systems to farmers in then 16 counties.

The 319 funding ended this year. It seemed a very popular program was ending. NRCS decided to hire J.B. Harold as a full-time NRCS employee to save the popular Project Grass program.

Through various grant and funding sources, Project Grass will still give technical and financial assistance to farmers who wish to include rotational grazing into their livestock operation.

Cows 'stripgrazing ' the pasture with the Alice White Clover

ALICE White Clover. The grass really benefits from the Nitrogen being fixed and released by the ALICE White Clover. It is estimated that the ALICE White Clover fixes up to 200 units of Nitrogen per acre. Another remarkable thing is noted by the above photo: the strips without the ALICE White Clover do have some spots with some volunteer white clover. At those spots the grass does not show increased production at all, and the cows don't even like it. This proves the point that improved varieties like ALICE White Clover fix much more Nitrogen than the traditional white clovers and that it is more palatable. The picture also shows that cows really love the grass with the white clover, giving a new meaning to the work 'stripgrazing'.

Characteristics of ALICE White Clover;
Very palatable • High Nitrogen fixation • Good winter hardiness • Large leaves • Tall vigorous growth • Performs extremely well under grazing management.

BARIDANA a late maturing winterhardy Orchardgrass with excellent grazing characteristics. BARIDANA was developed in continental Europe (Czech Republic) and it has been tested under severe conditions. It has proven to withstand severe winters, but also is capable of coping with dry and hot summers If mixed with white clover (Alice) and or Chicory (Forage Feast, Puna) those pastures will become excellent summer producers allowing to graze or hay during dry periods in the summer. Compared to the industry's standard (Potomac) BARIDANA has several advantages· Later heading • More palatable • Higher digestible • More winterhardy • Higher yielding. BARIDANA is also very suitable for intensive grazing or cutting. Its primary use will be the Midwest and the Northeast of the United States. BARIDANA is also very suitable for hay production with yields of up to 7 tons of DM per acre. BARIDANA orchardgrass is well suited for mixed seeding with alfalfa's, since it is winterhardy and late maturing. They can be planted at the same time since orchardgrass is not to aggressive in its establishment. This results in a nice combined stand and does not complicate the harvest window.

MINDING YOUR P's and Q's

P is for PRODUCTION, as well as for PROLIFIC, PERSIST and PRISTINE.

Q is for QUALITY and QUANTITY which follow when you plant any of Doebler's three outstanding ALFALFA varieties for the Year 2000 and Beyond.

PROLIFIC is our NEW release. A branch rooted alfalfa, it is a high forage yielder and winter hardy, designed for poorly drained soils. When freezing and thawing occur, the branch rooted plant is better secured in the ground with more of its root system above the water table. The branch rooted trait adjusts as moisture stresses intensify. Prolific will be a good companion alfalfa to a highly productive tap rooted variety.

Then there is PERSIST, Doebler's cornerstone alfalfa. It is just what the name says, a very persistent alfalfa with a solid disease resistance base which provides solid protection in adverse environments. With a fall dormancy of 4, Persist will continue well into 4 to 5 productive years. A high forage yielder, Persist has a track record in many state trials (PA, NY and others) that have placed it FIRST in many years for yield, stand persistence and performance.

Introduced in late 1997, PRISTINE is unique. Sown at Rock Springs, Centre County, PA by the Department of Agronomy at Penn State University for the Commercial Alfalfa Variety Trials, PRISTINE RANKED FIRST out of 25 varieties seeded for harvest in 1998. These results, combined with those from a similar test site farther south in Landisville, Lancaster Co., PA, average out to a HIGH 2ND PLACE PERFORMANCE. With a fall dormancy of 4 and winter hardiness less than 3, it is a finely stemmed, leafy variety with great standibility and the most remarkable recovery rating after each cutting. Forage quality and pounds of milk per acre have proven themselves with Pristine. It has become a must for quality producers.

Doebler's help you mind your P's and Q's!
